

Chapter 4

Astrological Constants and Statistical Analysis of 30 Vocations

While in this book only 30 different vocations are analyzed by the statistical method of selecting the most constant factors in the timed birth-charts of people who follow them, its usefulness is intended to extend to all vocations. A little thought based on what is said in this book will indicate the type of natural aptitudes required to follow any vocation, and therefore just which planets must be prominent and just which houses must be active to indicate these aptitudes. The last half of chapter three and the analyses of the vocations which form this chapter should make it comparatively easy thus to select the astrological constants indicating the thought-cell activity giving any required aptitudes.

It should, of course, be understood when I refer under each vocation to The Luck Factor, that I am not implying good fortune or bad fortune without an adequate cause. That which is called good luck or bad luck is the result of the activity of harmonious thought-cells or discordant thought-cells. But to avoid endlessly repeating this explanation, I shall refer to it merely as The Luck Factor; just as for convenience astrologers refer to Sun and Moon as planets, knowing full well one is a star and the other a satellite.

A study of the luck attracting power of the associations amid which the 30 vocations here analyzed may with advantage be employed will give a background for deciding what the luck attracting associations should be for an individual with given planets harmonious and given planets discordant, whose aptitudes are those for any vocation not here considered.

The other three of the five factors that should receive attention in the selection of a vocation--previous conditioning, present environmental conditions, and the individual's progressed aspects --are as easily appraised relative to other vocations as to these here analyzed, and in the selection of any vocation must be considered on their individual merits.

The statistical analysis and comments that follow, therefore, while applying specifically to the vocations of which we have been able to obtain 100 charts of those following each, are by no means confined in their usefulness to so limited a field. Instead, they should afford a reliable statistical basis on which the advisability of following any vocation, whatever it may be, can be determined.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Leo highest, Scorpio next, then came Cancer, Virgo and Libra. Pisces and Aries were lowest with only about half as many as Leo.

There are no doubt two distinct reasons why Saturn is constantly prominent in the charts of architects. One is that Saturn is the planet of planning, and an architect's work consists chiefly in planning various kinds of structures. The careful attention to innumerable details, the necessity that every item shall occupy exactly its proper place relative to every other item, and the painstaking estimates of the ability of materials to stand up under a given stress, all call upon active Saturn thought-cells.

The other reason is that Saturn is general ruler of structures and the land on which they rest. For one to be interested sufficiently in buildings to be drawn into association with them as a vocation would seem thought-cells. The fourth house maps the common thought-cells relating more specifically to the department of life having to do with buildings of all kinds.

Not only do the plans of the architect require plodding and painstaking work; but in the calculation of stresses, of the suitability of material, of the cost of the materials to be used, and the exact amounts of various items required, there is call upon mathematical ability. The study required to become an architect, and the cerebral activity employed in the work, make calls upon the thought-cell activity mapped by Mercury. But in addition, the mathematical part of the work makes calls upon abilities which Mars thought-cells and Mercury thought-cells together provide.

Constructive work of any kind needs active Mars thought-cells. But mathematical ability requires both active Mars thought-cells and active Mercury thought-cells. And in so far as these two planets are concerned, they are even more essential to an architect than to a draftsman; for in addition to the skill in the use of drafting tools which they give, there is also required a higher degree of mathematical ability, and more constructive energy of the type which Mars alone affords.

There is also greater call upon the imagination, which Neptune rules. The architect must be able to visualize how a building or other structure will look when completed. And he cannot merely visualize what someone else has created, he must be able to employ creative imagination in a high degree. The creative energy is furnished by Mars, and the imagination by Neptune.

In its broader application Mars is the planet of creative energy. That is, it furnishes the energy to build dams, skyscrapers, dwellings, and machines. But for creative energy to flow persistently into artistic work of any kind the Venus thought-cells also must be active. Active Venus thought-cells alone give an appreciation of beauty, and confer good taste where appearances are concerned; but alone they do not create anything. For artistic creation of any kind, including that of an architect, there must be active gonad glands, the hormones of which give a creative urge beyond that required by the ordinary needs of human life.

Venus and Mars are closely associated in their rulership over the gonad glands. Their influence is not easily separated. But when both are prominent, and especially when closely in aspect to each other, their thought-cell activity stimulates the secretion of the gonad hormone, which acting upon the nerves generates electromagnetic energy of the frequency employed by the affectional system. And this electromagnetic energy gives both the urge and the power for artistic creation.

Such artistic expression may take the form of selecting certain beauties from nature and reproducing them. But if the Neptune thought-cells also are active, the imagination not merely selects certain more obvious things for its composition, but also explores the inner plane, even though the individual is unaware he is thus employing the extra-sensory perception which active Neptune thought-cells give. His intense creative urge extends his consciousness beyond that which the physical senses can report to gather material. The unconscious mind leaves no stone unturned either on the physical plane or the inner plane to acquire proper material for the creative work attempted, and to bring it together in pleasing effect.

In greater degree than the draftsman, the architect, in addition to creative imagination, must possess the good taste mapped by a prominent Venus. The appreciation of harmony is an activity of the Venus thought-cells. The draftsman requires such taste merely to induce him to keep his drawings neat. But the architect, in addition, must be able to visualize harmony in the structure he plans.

Originality of any kind depends upon the activity of the Uranus thought-cells. And as an architect's work requires originality, the invention of new designs, which a draftsman's work does not, he must have the Uranus thought-cells more active. People with active Saturn thought-cells can make plans based on what others already have done. They have thoroughness and system. But unless there are also active Uranus thought-cells they will never design anything new. The creative imagination supported by active Neptune thought-cells gives visions of beauty; but for the actual inventive ability an architect needs, the Uranus thought-cells should be active.

As his work calls for placing on paper his estimates and drawings, to make this department of life significant enough to attract him to such work, he also needs active third house thought-cells.

The Luck Factor

An architect's work, unlike that of a mere draftsman, makes Mercury and the third house incidental to planning, which is ruled by Saturn, and to structures, which are ruled by the fourth house. His work thus primarily is ruled by Saturn, and in determining his luck while following it, we should look first of all to how Saturn is aspected. Primarily, to the extent, and from those quarters indicated by harmonious aspects to Saturn, will good fortune help him in this vocation, Secondarily, as the success of the completed structures is a determinant of success in the long run, the good fortune or ill fortune--as distinct from ability--is indicated by the harmony or discord of the fourth house thought-cells. Yet among practicing architects, nearly three fourths of them offset with ability a fourth house more discordant than harmonious. This means that they follow the profession of their choice in spite of adversities encountered.

Artist

Birth-charts of artists analyzed	100	100%
Charts with Venus prominent	99	99%
Charts with Mars prominent.....	99	99%
Charts with Neptune prominent	96	96%
Charts with Mercury prominent	94	94%

Charts with Venus aspecting Moon or Mercury.....	91	91%
Charts with Mars aspecting Moon or Mercury.....	91	91%
Charts with Venus aspecting Mars.....	66	66%

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Gemini the highest, with Libra and Sagittarius next highest. The lowest numbers were found in Aries, Taurus and Aquarius, each of which had just two thirds as many as either Libra or Sagittarius. Even so, if the planetary constants are shown, there is no justification in discouraging a person from becoming an artist simply because his Sun, Moon and Ascendant are in signs which hold fewer artists than some of the others.

Those who succeed as artists usually have the ability to think clearly about things. They have ideas or impressions which they desire to express as accurately as possible on canvas, and in the manner which most completely will transfer them to the minds of those who look at their work. I speak of painting here because, with the exception of a few commercial artists, practically all the 100 charts analyzed were those of painters. And in painting, the material selected to be included requires the exercise of such critical intelligence as is afforded by active Mercury thought-cells. The painter needs not merely the artistic sense to feel when he has produced the effect he desires, but also ability to think deeply and make proper selection of what should go into, and what should be left out of, his composition. Furthermore, he should have the manual dexterity which a prominent Mercury gives. Thus, while not so important as some of the other factors, active Mercury thought-cells are a decided advantage to an artist.

The accurate reproduction of an object or scene usually is not considered art. A camera thus can be made to represent actual physical conditions. Art requires selectivity, as already mentioned in connection with Mercury, and the combination of the selected material in such a way as to dramatize something. Through selectivity and artistic combination of material the picture must be more beautiful than the original, or it must emphasize some factor and suppress others in a manner that will convey to the observer the conception or feeling which the artist wishes to impart.

Art to be successful must dramatize. And whether in business or in art in any of its various forms, including painting, when dramatic talent must be employed, the promoter or artist to be successful must possess active thought-cells such as are mapped by Neptune in his chart of birth. Not only moving picture stars, writers of fiction, and musicians, need Neptune prominent in their charts of birth, but those in all other fields of artistic endeavor.

But while it includes the exercise of Mercury intelligence and Neptune climatic appreciation, artistic work is essentially an expression of creative energy. Those who do not possess creative energy cannot express it. An individual can use only what he has. The ordinary conditions of everyday life, including the domestic relations, make some call upon creative energy. But beyond developing sufficient creative energy to fulfill such ordinary needs of human life, to be creative as an artist the individual must develop more than the normal intensity and volume of creative energy. This means that he must have a glandular makeup such that he generates electrical energies of tremendous power which radiate electromagnetic wave-lengths of the type most readily used by the affectional system.

To generate this type of electromagnetic power there must be strong and active gonad glands, such as are ruled by Venus and Mars. Mars and Venus are too closely associated in their influence upon the sex function to be able to separate their influences as affecting the gonad glands. Yet it is quite proper to speak of Venus as the planet of love and affection and Mars as the planet of energy and passion, to point out that the thyroid gland on which normal energy production depends reacts not only to the Sun but also to Venus, and that the glands of emergency energy, the adrenals, react not merely to Saturn but equally as vigorously to Mars.

In its broader application Mars is the planet of creative energy. It is used to give the doctor the desire and ability to heal. It is used by the engineer in the drawing of plans and the building of bridges, dams and skyscrapers. It is used by the soldier to enable him to destroy, and by the law-enforcement officer in meeting the force of the criminal with superior force and helping build a more secure society. Wherever initiative and the destruction or the building of something are required, the glandular makeup necessary calls for active gonads and ample adrenalin.

But for the creative energy to flow persistently not merely into sporadic passion and cerebral and physical activity, but into the affectional system, the glandular reactions produced by the Venus vibrations must be sufficient to divert the creative energy into this particular electrical system of the human constitution. And to do this the planet Venus must be prominent in the chart of birth.

The electromagnetic energies radiated by this Venus type of activity may be long or short, and the potential varies greatly, but they do have the quality of supporting intense feeling and encouraging some expression of love. Love is capable of expression on an innumerable number of levels. Under the dominion of the selfish propensities of Mars it expresses as lust. On a higher level it expresses as the marital attraction between husband and wife, and as the affection for children and friends. Some intensely love the birds and the trees and the flowers. The appreciation of a gorgeous sunset or the majesty of a mighty waterfall is an expression of the love nature. Ecstasy and religious fervor are sublimations of the same energies even though they require the action of either Neptune or Jupiter to make the sublimation possible.

To be able to create there must be ample Mars energy. To be able to appreciate beauty there must be ample Venus energy. To be able to create beauty there must be both ample Mars energy and ample Venus energy. It takes adequate Venus energy to divert the energy of Mars into channels which relate to beauty. As both Venus and Mars have, a powerful influence over the gonads, an aspect between these two planets is the best indication that strong electrical energies--in some individuals so strong that it controls them--of the affectional system surge over their nerves. The Moon or Mercury aspecting these planets facilitates the expression in forms of art.

The Luck Factor

As Venus rules art in general and painting in particular, the harmony or discord of the thought-cells mapped by Venus are significant of the tendency to attract luck in association with artistic work. However, a harmonious planet in the chart, especially if it makes a favorable aspect with Venus, may indicate some special association amid which more luck would be attracted.

If Venus made a harmonious aspect to a planet in the ninth, for instance, it would signify that art work in connection with books or periodicals would be fortunate. Magazine covers or advertising thus would be indicated as fortunate associations. Or if there were a good aspect between Venus and the ruler of the fifth house, or the fifth house and Neptune were fortunate in the chart, the artist would be lucky doing art work for theatres or the moving picture industry. Saturn well aspected in the chart, or harmoniously aspecting Venus, would indicate luck in interior decorating; and Jupiter well aspected in the chart, or harmoniously aspecting Venus, would indicate ability to attract the patronage of wealthy people.

Astrologer

Birth-charts of astrologers analyzed 100 100%
 Charts with Uranus prominent..... 100 100%

Charts with Neptune or Pluto prominent	100	100%
Charts with Mercury prominent	94	94%
Charts with Pluto prominent	92	92%
Charts with Neptune prominent	86	86%

We also tabulated the signs in these charts occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant; but none of them stood out from the others sufficiently to warrant it being given special mention, and certainly no sign can be considered a birth-chart constant of astrologers.

To the extent the upper-octave planets Uranus, Neptune and Pluto are prominent in a birth-chart is the individual easily interested in things out of the ordinary, including psychic matters and astrology. Not all of those who have one or more, of the upper-octave planets prominent become interested in astrology, however. Some with Uranus prominent use the energy of these thought-cells in oratory or in legal practice, in engineering, in invention, or in some other form of originality. Some with Neptune prominent use the energy of the Neptune thought-cells in dramatic work or in promoting something quite apart from occult work. And some with Pluto prominent use its thought-cell energy in becoming gangsters, or leaders in some constructive work where co-operation is required.

Yet those who seriously engage in any occult pursuit, such as astrology, metaphysics, or spiritual healing, always have at least one, and usually at least two, of the upper-octave planets prominent in their charts of birth.

Uranus is the planet of astrology. This means that the thought-cells mapped by the planet Uranus must have considerable activity if an individual is to become interested in astrology. And, other things being equal, the more active the Uranus thought-cells are, the greater the chance that the individual will be attracted to astrology.

While it is extremely unlikely that a person in whose chart Uranus is not prominent will become an astrologer; yet some of the best known promoters of astrology have had Neptune far more prominent in their charts--often, in the tenth house-- than Uranus. In these cases there may have been merely a close aspect of Sun, Moon or Mercury to Uranus, and Uranus not in an angle. This was sufficient, however, to enable the individual to become conversant with astrological practice. And thus conversant with it, the still more powerful Neptune thought-cells enabled him to promote astrology on a vast scale; where others of perhaps much greater astrological ability were able to become only slightly known, and did correspondingly little for the spread of valuable astrological information.

In astrology, as in other professions, the ability to attract patronage is to quite an extent dependent upon the activity of the thought-cells mapped by Jupiter. And thus in the analysis of these 100 charts of astrologers, it was found that those who follow it as a profession, and with some degree of success, almost invariably also have a prominent birth-chart Jupiter. There are a great many people who believe in astrology, and would like to know more about it, who never become astrologers. Usually they have Uranus prominent, or at least some of the upper-octave planets prominent; but lack the necessary intellectual application to become proficient in the subject. If Uranus is prominent enough, this may make up for the lack of a prominent Mercury, as the table indicates. But usually only those with the Intellectual thought-cells active, as mapped by a prominent birth-chart Mercury, are studious enough to become astrologers.

The Pluto thought-cells tend to give an interest in all types of invisible forces, including those received from the planets. They thus favor an interest in all occult subjects; and when they are directed into constructive channels, they incline to use all such invisible energies for the advancement of mankind.

Among astrologers, in addition to those who are able to give good astrological readings from following the rules and their own observation of what chart positions commonly indicate, there are two other outstanding types.

One of these has the Mars thought-cells active, usually Mars in close aspect to Mercury, or at least aspecting the Moon. Uranus may be quite prominent, and usually is. These aspects of Mars give facility in mathematics. And those who have weak Mars and Mercury thought-cells often have great difficulty learning to erect a chart and work out the progressed aspects. But at the other extreme are some of those who have Mars and Mercury quite prominent, who are unusually proficient in mathematics, but who can, seemingly, never learn to read a chart. Commonly this type devotes much energy to working out difficult and complicated theories based on mathematics; but is quite unreliable in delineating from these theories, or from those more commonly accepted. The other pronounced type is the person who has Neptune a dominant influence in his chart, and not sufficient Uranus, Mars and Mercury to give a desire for even the simplest work with figures. These people have made a habit of getting things the easy way; through the use of their psychic faculties. Often they seem quite to lack the ability, or with others the initiative, to learn to erect a birth-chart and work out the progressed aspects from which alone a scientific delineation and forecast can be made.

Yet these people often give readings which are amazingly correct from a chart someone else has erected. More commonly than not they have little concise knowledge of the rules of scientific astrology, and vary the reading according to the way they feel. They can always point to some planet or position as responsible for what they say will take place; but on different occasions will attribute quite opposite tendencies to the same astrological position. These people, who invariably have a prominent Neptune, and Uranus perhaps just prominent enough to interest them in astrology, are not scientific astrologers. They merely tune in on the individual through the avenue of the birth-chart and progressed aspects, and depend upon feeling extra-sensory perception to give them the information they desire. Yet, often, the readings they give are amazingly correct.

Thus, in addition to the typically Uranian astrologers, there are mathematical astrologers, and there are psychic astrologers. And it is a very valuable thing for the truly scientific Uranian astrologer to have sufficient of the Mars-Mercury or Mars-Moon influence to be able to handle the mathematics of his work with facility. Also it is quite valuable for him to have Neptune prominent enough to enable him to pick, through his psychic impressions, the particular event among several that might be expected to be attracted under a given progressed aspect.

While it is true that extremes of the mathematical type, and extremes of the psychic type, are not the most desirable astrologers; yet there can be no doubt that some ability along mathematical and psychic lines is an advantage. Also, that thought-cells mapped by a prominent Pluto assist to understand how the planetary energies operate, and what to expect from them. Thus in addition to mathematical ability enough to set up a chart and work progressed aspects, the best indications of ability are to have all three upper-octave planets prominent.

The Luck Factor

As astrology is essentially ruled by Uranus, the general fortune attracted in association with it is indicated by the aspects to Uranus. In its practice, however, it is customary to interview clients, and the clients are ruled by the seventh house. The luck with clients in general must be appraised from the aspects to the ruler of the seventh. If the third is a fortunate house, and the first badly afflicted, more fortune is indicated through a mail order practice; as the discordant personality will then not have facilities for bringing about disagreeable events. The well aspected planets in the chart indicate the types of clients from whom the most luck may be expected in the practice of astrology; especially any planets favorably aspecting Uranus.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Virgo highest, with Sagittarius having almost as many. Cancer was lowest, Capricorn next lowest, and Aries with only one more than Capricorn and two more than Cancer; Cancer having a little more than half as many as Virgo.

Neither the number of planets in the first house nor the number in the fifth house can be considered significant. In these same charts 54 show planets in the eighth house and 60 planets in the twelfth. However, the absent rulers of these two houses are powerfully enough aspected to make the first house and the fifth house significant.

The element of personality does not seem so pronounced as that of store clerks, in whose charts 62% had planets in the first house. But it does seem that the physical body, which is more closely related to the first house than to any other, must have the activity indicated by strong aspects to its ruler.

The house ruling sports and amusements of all kinds is the fifth. It seems that to be attracted powerfully enough to sports to make the effort to excel in them requires, not planets in the fifth, but the amount of fifth-house thought-cell activity mapped by its ruler being strongly aspected.

The factor in the tabulation which was not anticipated is the prominence of Neptune. At first the thought occurred that this may have been influenced by the fact that quite a number of those whose charts were analyzed in this group had been connected with the movies, which Neptune rules.

However, in addition to dramatic talent, we have found that Neptune is strongly associated with amusements of all kinds. People frequently take vacations, or temporarily withdraw from the more utilitarian pursuits of life, under progressed aspects to Neptune. It thus seems to have an affinity for recreation of all sorts.

Furthermore, the athlete who becomes outstanding--and the charts used were mostly of professionals and amateurs who had attained considerable recognition--must have some promotional ability. Most of those who attain eminence in athletics, either with an amateur standing or professionally, have considerable ability to dramatize their talents.

Sports in general come under the rulership of Jupiter. Not only athletics, but horse racing and sailing contests. The seriousness of Saturn, untempered by Jupiter, considers such events a waste of good time and energy. Jupiter likes to laugh, to meet his fellows in a playful mood, and is quite willing to spend time and money on that which gives him enjoyment. Venus is not adverse to having a good time; but does so less boisterously than does Jupiter. Social events, dancing, music, the arts and not too vigorous indoor amusements, are typical of Venus. But Jupiter needs more action and less daintiness to give him a good time. Not only the liking for sports, but the good fellowship of those engaged in it and of those attending sporting events, are evidences of the influence of Jupiter; in fact, that which commonly is called "good sportsmanship" is an expression of the Jupiterian spirit of fair play and willingness to abide by the rules even if the cost is great.

But associated with sports there has come to be also, at times, an atmosphere which is not Jupiterian. If we consider good sportsmanship an expression of Jupiter, we are warranted, I believe, in attributing "fixed" prize fights, "fixed" horse races, "fixed" baseball games, and such concealed machinations of sports events, to the scheming qualities of Neptune. Such events are promotions of the Neptune confidence-man type.

So far as muscular ability is concerned, we must look chiefly to the prominence of the planet Mars. It not only gives strength and agility to the muscles, but furnishes energy of the high voltage type which is so necessary for violent action. In other words, Mars is the planet ruling athletes. But the other planets indicated in the table also must be prominent; otherwise the individual may express his Mars not in athletics, but in mechanical or engineering lines. And many an individual who, if he had Jupiter, Neptune and the fifth house sufficiently active to give him a love for sports, could make a champion, is quite content to handle tools or build skyscrapers.

Intelligence is of various kinds. Some relates to understanding science, some to expressing thought in speech or writing, and some to other lines of endeavor. In most vocations it is an advantage to have Mercury prominent in the birth-chart.

Athletic supremacy is not merely a matter of brawn. It also requires quick perception and ability intelligently to adapt to swiftly changing conditions. A baseball player or one engaged in teamwork sports of any kind, must be able to size up instantly a situation involving many others, and act upon the decision then made. Prize fighting and wrestling requires fast and sound headwork. It should not be surprising, therefore, to find that Mercury is usually prominent in the charts of those who succeed in athletics; and that when Mercury is not prominent the planet Uranus is.

The Luck Factor

Where strife is present, even the friendly strife of athletics, Mars thought-cells are important. And as Mars is the primary ruler of athletics, as distinct from the other types of sports, we should look to the aspects of Mars to determine the general luck attracted in association with athletics. Those with heavy Mars afflictions, especially at the time progressed aspects form to Mars, are those with a tendency to become injured while engaged in athletics.

While Mars is the more important factor in determining the general luck attracted in association with athletics; the luck attracted while associated with sports in general is only less significant. And in determining this, give about equal weight to the aspects of the planet Jupiter, planetary ruler of sports, and to the aspects of the ruler of the fifth house, which is the house of sports. It is to be noted that the analysis shows the fifth house more often than not more discordant than harmonious. Jupiter also is more often more discordant than harmonious. Even one favorable aspect to Jupiter and one favorable aspect to the ruler of the fifth is a great help, and may enable an athlete of outstanding ability to gain recognition.

We tabulated the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were located in these charts, but none of them were outstanding enough to warrant special mention; and certainly none can be considered the birth-chart constant of aviators.

Not only in reference to its prominence in aviators' charts, but in reference to world and national events in which aviation has played an important part, the dates on which outstanding flights have been undertaken, and the progressed aspects in aviators' charts when they undertook important flights, we have been able to check the rulership of aviation. There at present can remain no doubt that Neptune is the planet ruling this vocation, and flying in general. Even as a prominent Neptune in business signifies that the sky is the limit, so among occupations it is even more literally so.

While most of the unusually important flights have been made when the aviator was under a progressed aspect to Neptune, this is not true of all of them. For instance, in 1924, James H. Doolittle made the first Dawn to Dark flight across the U. S. under progressed Sun P Neptune. In the first round the world flight, Lieutenant Smith, commander of the fleet of Navy planes, was under progressed Venus trine progressed Neptune. Admiral Byrd was first to fly across the North Pole in 1926, while he was under the influence of progressed Mars trine birth-chart Neptune. He crossed the Atlantic in 1927 under progressed Mars trine progressed Neptune; but having run out of Neptune progressions, he flew over the South Pole in 1929 under the influence of progressed Venus square Uranus.

Of the two charts tabulated in which the ninth house ruler was not powerfully aspected, one of these is that of Anne Morrow Lindbergh, the ruler of whose third house is in the tenth and powerfully aspected. Captain Charles Lindbergh on his famous New York to Paris flight was not under a progressed aspect to Neptune; but under progressed Mercury sextile Uranus. Amelia Earhart, the first woman to fly the Atlantic, however, had Venus progressed to the semi-sextile of Neptune when she made that flight; and Captain Hugo Eckner made the first Zeppelin flight around the world in 1929 when the progressed Sun came opposition birth-chart Neptune. Even in a later around the world flight record, that of Post and Gatty, making the trip in less than nine days, while we do not have the data for Gatty, we find that Wiley Post, the pilot, was under progressed Mars P Neptune.

Wiley Post later, along with the famous humorist, Will Rogers, perished in Alaska on a pioneering flight to route an airway to Siberia, while under heavy progressed afflictions to Mars; and Amelia Earhart perished in the Pacific in 1937, on a round the world trip, while under unusually heavy progressed afflictions from Mars. On January 11, 1938, the giant Samoan Clipper burned in mid-air, dropping bits of wreckage and the charred bodies of her crew of seven into the Pacific. Of the six whose dates of birth were ascertained, each had a heavily afflicted Mars in his birth-chart, and at the time of the disaster a strong progressed aspect to Mars.

Thus it is indicated that those who contemplate following aviation as a profession, at least until it becomes less hazardous, should pay more than usual attention to the birth-chart constants and progressed constants of accidents. These are given detailed consideration, based on a statistical analysis of 100 accidents, in When and What Events Will Happen. Especially should those who have a powerful and afflicted birth-chart Mars, avoid hazardous journeys when there is a strong progressed aspect to Mars, particularly if the progressed aspect is discordant.

As to the ability to become an aviator, the individual should have active thought-cells such as are mapped by a prominent Neptune to attract him to flying.

To give him the required general mechanical ability, and the necessary daring, he needs also active thought-cells such as are mapped by a prominent Mars.

To enable him to handle the various electrical gadgets with which a plane is provided, and to give ingenuity in making repairs on delicate instruments, he needs active thought-cells such as are mapped by a prominent Uranus.

One who travels much must have the thought-cells mapped by the third and ninth houses unusually active. If they are not active, he will travel little; which would disqualify him as an aviator. As most aviation work involves long journeys, to attract to him such long trips, he should have active ninth house thought-cells.

The Luck Factor

Primarily he needs to have Mars, Saturn and Uranus--especially Mars, which is the chief accident planet --without such heavy discordant aspects that they indicate he will crack up.

As aviation is ruled by Neptune, any good aspect which Neptune receives is a great help, as it indicates that he will get the "breaks" that much in his favor in association with aviation activities.

Yet as most of his work also involves the ninth house, every harmonious aspect to the ruler of the ninth is a luck factor in his favor while on the journeys he must make. Aspects to the ruler of the ninth, from the luck standpoint, are probably more important than those to Neptune.

If aviators could be commanded, or persuaded, not to undertake pilot work while under progressed aspects to the planets which are the progressed constants of accidents, particularly while Mars is afflicted by progression, there would be few accidents. Even if the planets Neptune, Mars and Uranus, which give aviation ability, were powerfully afflicted in the birth-chart, accident could thus be avoided in the air. And working in a shop dining such a period when by progression Mars, Saturn or Uranus was afflicted--particularly Mars--the individual would run far less hazard, and would endanger others only in a minor degree.

In the analysis of these 100 charts by the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant, Libra was found to be highest-- possibly because Libra dislikes dirty work and tends to neatness and precision--with twice as many as Pisces, which was lowest. Next to highest in number were Gemini and Leo, and next to the lowest were Capricorn and Aquarius. No one, however, should be dissuaded from becoming a bookkeeper merely because of the sign occupied by Sun, Moon or Ascendant if the planetary prominence and house activity indicate natural aptitude for such work.

Almost invariably in these charts when the third house is weak and afflicted the eighth house is strong and well aspected; and when the eighth house is weak and afflicted the third house is strong and well aspected.

attention must be paid to detail. And nothing helps an individual to follow a hum-drum occupation in which there is no change or excitement, and in which precision, order and system are required, so well as active thought-cells mapped by the planet Saturn. Any work which requires a dull monotonous grind, and persistence enough not to give up until the job has been finished just right, calls upon the experiences incorporated in the Saturn thought-cells.

Any calling which requires alertness and the constant use of intelligence in solving problems, whether those problems be mechanical in nature, artistic, financial, political or mathematical, brings into expression the thought-cells mapped by Mercury. Scientists and writers are all too apt to jump to the conclusion that occupations other than their own do not require a high degree of intelligence. The intelligence which the Mercury thought-cells express, however, may find an outlet through a wide number of channels. The shrewd trader exercises the Mercury thought-cells, as does the Australian Bushman whose testimony as to the owner of any track, even though he has not seen a similar one for years, is valid in a court of law. If such a tracker has ever seen a track once, he can always identify it. And he can follow its owner in dry rock country where the white scientist cannot discern that even a pebble has been moved.

A scientist requires active Mercury thought-cells which are given a special trend by the prominence of still other planets. But if scientists think they have a monopoly on intelligence, let them try to be movie stars, waiters in a restaurant, telephone operators, or trackers through the Australian bush. They will find special training necessary even to do mediocre work in any of these vocations; and that with any amount of training they can come no nearer to doing the bushman tracker's work than with the same amount of training the bushman tracker can do theirs.

For facility with figures the mechanical qualities mapped by the Mars thought-cells are needed. We have found in teaching astrology that those with Mars lacking in prominence in their birth-charts, and with Neptune correspondingly prominent, usually are the ones who have difficulty in learning to erect a birth-chart. The same mechanical ability that enables an individual to handle other tools and to build things, seems to give ability to use arithmetic as a tool.

However, for the more abstract type of mathematics, prominent Mars thought-cells are not enough. The use of higher mathematics requires also the exercise of the Saturn thought-cells, and the more abstruse the problem, the farther removed from concrete things which can be visualized, the more the Saturn thought-cells are called upon. That is, merely to handle figures with facility requires a prominent Mercury and Mars; but to be a mathematician requires also a prominent Saturn. And to be a book-keeper, while not requiring much mathematical ability, calls upon the Saturn thought-cells for the reason already mentioned.

While not sufficiently prominent to be considered a constant, the prominence of Uranus in the charts of bookkeepers also is sufficient to note. Uranus is the planet of short-cuts and quick methods; but its moderate prominence in the charts of bookkeepers seems to be in the nature of reinforcing the work of the Mercury thought-cells, of which the Uranus thought-cells are an upper-octave expression.

The fact that the third house in the birth-chart of bookkeepers nearly always shows so great activity undoubtedly is due to the nature of the work which is of the third house type. Writing and calculating, as well as thinking, are third house activities; and to be a bookkeeper one must thus utilize daily, and with some vigor, these third house thought-cells. And if they are to be called upon for so much work they must possess the required amount of energy.

That the eighth house commonly is quite active, although not unusually active so often as the third, seems to be due to the circumstance that the work done relates to other people's money, which is ruled by the eighth house. We find that to be strongly associated with the things of some one of the twelve departments of life, the individual must have active thought-cells mapped by the house of his birth-chart ruling that department of life.

The Luck Factor

Although Saturn is more often prominent than Mercury, bookkeeping is typically a third house and Mercury association. It would seem even more typically third house than Mercury; for Mercury thought-cell activity expresses through so wide a variety of channels. Therefore, of primary importance in appraising the general luck attracted in this vocation should be considered the aspects of the ruler of the third house. Even so, it is usually more discordant than harmonious. But it is well for it to receive at least one strong harmonious aspect, so that all the "breaks" will not be adverse. In addition, but of secondary importance, the power and aspects of Mercury should be taken into consideration.

Yet probably of as much significance in relation to luck as the third house, is the planet ruling the kind of business for which the bookkeeping is done. And as this is optional with the one seeking employment, it deserves every bookkeeper's close attention. If Mars is harmonious, bookkeeping for a hardware or manufacturing firm would prove more fortunate; if Jupiter is harmonious, a merchandising firm is indicated; if Venus is harmonious, bookkeeping where women's apparel or art objects are handled; if Uranus is harmonious, working for an automobile firm; if Pluto is harmonious, for those associated with radios, etc.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Leo highest, with Virgo and Libra having almost as many. Taurus was lowest with a little over half as many as Leo; and Gemini and Cancer were next lowest.

Chemistry relates to changing the inside factors of compounds, of manipulating groups (Pluto) of atoms so that they separate from, or combine with, other atoms to form other molecules. These atoms form the inside of molecules, and Pluto rules the inside of things. The forces which cause atoms to combine into compounds relate to the fields which accompany the smallest particles of matter, invisible forces such as Pluto rules. To understand how these forces within the molecules operate, and to handle them successfully, seems to require active Pluto thought-cells. And it appears also that Pluto is the chief ruler of chemistry, and therefore of chemists. To be attracted to this calling requires active Pluto thought-cells.

The manipulation of chemicals is work of the most exacting kind. A single drop more of some ingredient than the specified amount may bring disaster. No guess work can be tolerated; everything must be measured or weighed with the utmost precision. And such precision demands that the Saturn thought-cells be active.

The chemist also must be a man of system and order. He cannot afford to hurry in his work. Instead, he must be deliberate and persistent. Without active Saturn thought-cells adequate system for handling chemicals, many of which are dangerous, is lacking.

Some of the chemicals which the chemist must handle are ruled by Neptune. Neptune not only rules gases, but is general ruler of poisons of all kinds. If the individual does not have active Neptune thought-cells it is unlikely he will be brought as closely into contact with poisons as a chemist habitually is.

Uranus is the research planet, and the thought-cells it maps in the birth-chart give the ability to discover the facts about things. And they give originality, such as a chemist must have in his analytical work. Furthermore, Uranus rules the various complicated gadgets which a chemist is called upon to use, and at times even invent, in following his work.

A chemist not only must be able to invent apparatus to meet his special needs, but he is called upon to construct many things in the laboratory. He must be a person of considerable manufacturing skill, able to make what he needs from the crude materials which he finds at hand.

For such constructive ability the Mars thought-cells must be active.

As to become a chemist requires a keen mind and hard study, and its practice calls upon the intelligence constantly, he should also have the thought-cells mapped by Mercury quite active. It is not a trade to be followed by a person of dull intellect.

Chemicals, and drugs in particular, come under the rule of the sixth house. Therefore, unless the individual has active sixth house thought-cells, it is unlikely he will be sufficiently attracted into association with chemicals to become successful as a chemist.

The chemist's profession, as such, makes little call upon the social functions. It is work done in the laboratory, and depends little upon how much or how little the public likes the chemist. But when the chemist becomes a druggist, who in addition to filling prescriptions must sell to the public almost as many items as does a department store, he needs those thought-cells active in his chart which enable him to make a favorable impression on people.

If he has the Moon prominent and not too badly afflicted, it will enable him to handle the common people successfully. Even if the Moon is prominent and afflicted, he will contact many people, which has its advantages, but many of them will not like him.

A prominent Venus will enable him to give an impression of pleasantness which customers will like. This will help him draw trade. But for getting plenty of patronage there is nothing so good as active thought-cells mapped by a prominent Jupiter. People then will think him jolly, and will go far out of their way to trade with him, instead of trading with a rival.

The Luck Factor

Primarily the fortune attracted in association with chemistry in general is indicated by the aspects of the planet Pluto. But in relation to the fortune of such an association the ruler of the sixth house is only a little less important. If the vocation is to be that of a druggist, the aspects to the sixth house ruler are even more significant than the aspects to Pluto.

Chemistry, however, is practiced amid quite a variety of surroundings. Some chemists are employed in association with mining, in which case the aspects of Saturn and the ruler of the fourth become significant. Chemists are employed where processing and dyeing cotton fabric is done. Under these associations the aspects to Venus are highly important as indicating the fortune attracted. Other chemists are employed where iron and steel are manufactured. And amid such association the luck would largely be indicated by the aspects of Mars.

In relation to these environments, a harmonious aspect of Pluto, which rules chemistry, to the planet ruling the association, is quite favorable. As more often than not the sixth house is more discordant than harmonious, afflictions to the ruler of the sixth should be no deterrent, provided there is at least one strong harmonious, or several weak har-

Cosmetician

In a tabulation of these 100 charts by the signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant, we found that Aquarius was the highest, with Libra and Virgo next. Aries was lowest, with Cancer, Capricorn and Sagittarius next. The lowest signs had just about half as many as the highest signs. We were unable to pick any special house the activity of which conspicuously contributed to the success of these cosmeticians.

A successful cosmetician constructs something. To give a permanent, a facial massage, manicure the finger nails and give them the right polish, or any other of the numerous things a beauty operator does, requires mechanical skill, the use of tools, and some physical activity. Ability to do these things, as well as the creative impulse to build something better on the foundation at hand, and the skill to do so, whether that which is built is an airplane, an improvement to a house, or a better appearing complexion, requires that the thought-cells mapped by the planet Mars shall be active.

A cosmetician should have some artistic taste. And the refinement of feeling, and appreciation of color combinations and form, are conferred by the thought-cells mapped by the planet Venus. That is, to be more than skilled in the use of the implements of the trade, and thus really to attain harmonious results, the artistic abilities mapped by a prominent Venus in the birth-chart should be present.

For ability to deal with the people in general, the great mass of mankind, instead of some restricted class of it, there is needed the activity of the thought-cells mapped by the Moon. Whether it be the corner grocer who sells edibles, the druggist who sells almost everything in addition to drugs, or the cosmetician who serves the desire for beauty, if there is to be contact with a large number of the common people, it is advantageous to have a prominent birth-chart Moon. Individuals without the Moon thus prominent may understand the viewpoint and tastes of those following some certain occupation or profession, but they fail to grasp the likes and dislikes of the common people, and thus are less successful in their dealing with them.

Where co-operation is essential, or a group of people work together, it is advantageous to have active Pluto thought-cells. Pluto, as the higher-octave of the Moon, signifies the spirit that should actuate a home bread-ened to embrace society as a whole, or some section of it, as if it were part of a larger family over which there was exercised a paternal or maternal care. It is an asset in beauty parlor work, as well as in nursing, for the operator to have such a personal solicitude for the welfare of the one being served. And those with Pluto prominent in their birth- charts can acquire this beneficial attitude.

Neptune, while not so frequently prominent in the charts of cosmetics, is a valuable asset when present. The thought-cells which it taps in the unconscious mind are those which express as dramatic talent. And it is a function of a cosmetician to assist the client to dramatize the best points in the appearance, and to subdue and make unnoticeable the points of detraction. And those with Neptune prominent in their birth-charts have just the kind of imagination which enables them to perceive, before they actually work on a client, the effect which will be produced by a particular change, and its essential value in bringing out the result desired.

The Luck Factor

A cosmetician, no less than a physician and surgeon, is a builder, and thus must have a prominent birth- chart Mars. But as the desired result of the work has to do with beauty, rather than with strength and energy, the planet Venus is the most important single luck factor. If Venus is prominent and well aspected the luck attracted in any kind of work where beauty and harmony are outstanding in general should be good.

And those who meet the common people, whether as cosmeticians or in some retail trade, find it an asset from the luck standpoint to have the Moon harmoniously aspected.

As a third factor, not only in this work, but where the individual serves the public, the seventh house is important. An afflicted seventh house indicates there will be difficulties with customers. A well aspected seventh house tends to attract customers who are pleased with the service they receive.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Leo and Virgo highest, with Gemini lowest. Gemini, Sagittarius, Aries and Cancer were low, but had more than two thirds as many as Leo, Virgo and Aquarius, which were the three highest.

Venus is the planet of harmony and grace. Dancing is a type of artistic expression, and for success in any type of artistic expression the thought-cells mapped by Venus in the chart of birth must be active. Venus also is natural ruler of partnership; and while many dances do not require a partner, many of them also do. Dancing in general is closely associated with affection for someone of the opposite sex. In other words, it is hard to imagine one becoming a professional dancer who does not have a strong love nature.

Dancing is artistic expression in which rhythm is an essential element. Venus rules harmony, but the Moon rules time and tune and the sense of rhythm. Jungle folk, who have no ear for the harmonies of a symphony, often have this sense of rhythm highly developed. They dance to the beating of tom-toms, or to a stick struck against a hollowed out stump. Often primitive people, especially the blacks, can learn and carry, or even improvise, a melody; and the melody, as apart from harmony, is ruled by the Moon. Those with active Moon thought-cells often need take no thought about learning even intricate rhythms; for their unconscious minds instantly are impressed by it, and readily deliver it to objective consciousness.

Yet a professional dancer must not only have a sense of rhythm; but he must be able to dramatize his work. The appeal to the more subtle emotions is prompted by Neptune. Whether in writing, in the business world, or other form of art, only those with active Neptune thought-cells can successfully dramatize their work. After all, professional dancing is a form of acting, and requires the active Neptune thought-cells that make for any success upon screen or stage.

But dancing makes a greater call upon muscular strength and agility than most other forms of artistic expression. It taxes the muscles even as those of an athlete are taxed. The calls upon the muscles in professional dancing are too strenuous for a person who does not have Mars sufficiently prominent in his chart of birth. Active Mars thought-cells facilitate acquiring the muscular control and skill required, and furnish the necessary creative energy. Dancing is essentially an expression of the reproductive urge; and for success in it, as in other creative art, the hormone of the gonad glands must be ample to provide a surplus of creative energy. This condition usually is present when Venus and Mars both are outstanding in the chart of birth.

Not only must a professional dancer possess the alertness conferred by active Mercury thought-cells, but he must have an exceptionally good memory. Long and intricate routines must be so thoroughly memorized that each little movement always occurs in just the right place. Many an aspirant to dancing on the stage, who had no difficulty in handling the various movements, has had to give it up because he could not quickly memorize the long routines. Such memorizing calls for active Mercury thought-cells.

Dancing of a professional nature often is done in groups. And to attract an individual to such groups, and enable him successfully to cooperate in the group activity, he needs active Pluto thought-cells. In connection with such group activity one at once thinks of the work of chorus girls.

Where personality enters prominently into the work the first house, which rules it, is important. People with weak first house thought-cells seldom are able to capitalize on their personalities. But a dancer greatly depends upon his stage personality, the grace and beauty of his body in particular, in his work. Therefore it is highly important that he should have an active first house. The table indicates that quite a high percentage of professional dancers have first house thought-cells that are more discordant than harmonious. However, these discords are probably seldom manifest on the stage; they are discords that enter into their personal contacts with other dancers and other people which are chiefly discernible in their conduct and relations when not actually entertaining the public. But a dancer should have first house thought-cells active enough to give a vigorous stage personality.

As professional dancing is work which has to do with entertaining, it means fifth house associations during all the time the profession is followed. Therefore, to attract these associations the fifth house thought-cells should be active.

As dancing is ruled by Venus, the fortune that is likely to be attracted in association with this profession is largely denoted by the aspects of Venus. If Venus is too badly afflicted, difficulties will constantly be cropping up. Yet if Venus has one powerful harmonious aspect, and the planets which give natural aptitude for this work are outstanding, the individual may make a pronounced success of dancing in spite of the difficulties.

Important from the luck standpoint, but not so important as Venus, are the harmony and discord of the fifth house thought-cells as indicated by the aspects to the ruler of the fifth. Of those who actually follow dancing as a career the table shows that half of them have the fifth house thought-cells more discordant than harmonious. Therefore, if there is ability, and Venus has one strong harmonious aspect, the individual need not feel discouraged in reference to this calling; especially if the fifth house thought-cells are quite active, as indicated by its ruler being prominent in the chart.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Aries and Virgo highest, and Sagittarius lowest with a little more than half as many. Next to the highest was Leo, and next to lowest were Gemini and Cancer.

Those who are not contented merely to follow a trade, or merely to work with their hands, but have the feeling of abundance strong enough that they follow a profession, have active Jupiter thought-cells. Active Jupiter thought-cells tend to cause the individual to feel that life holds something better for him than a manual occupation. They work also to attract to the individual the opportunity to prepare himself for some profession; for law, medicine, the clergy, dentistry, or even the best type of astrologer; or to get him into salesmanship work or merchandising. But a person who does not have Jupiter prominent in his chart of birth has the utmost difficulty in getting into a profession. Jupiter is the planet of good-will and geniality which are so important in attracting patronage. The Jupiter thought-cells thus not only work to cause the individual to take up a profession, but they give the warmth and geniality which cause people to like him and come to him for service.

To become a dentist requires study and alertness, which are seldom possible to those who do not have active Mercury thought-cells. But there also is another reason Mercury thought-cells must be active in those who follow dentistry. Upon the Mercury thought-cells must depend the degree of dexterity; and few occupations require finer manipulations with the hands than does dentistry. If the dentist bungles the merest bit, the patient instantly suffers, and probably goes to another dentist.

Saturn rules the teeth, and to draw one into close association with them Saturn should be prominent in the chart of birth. But there again we have a second, and perhaps even more important reason for the prominence of the planet. A Jupiter-Mars individual who had sluggish Saturn thought-cells, when confronted with a decaying tooth would be for jerking it out. Just as a certain type of doctor seems satisfied only when removing an appendix or some other part of the anatomy. But a dentist's chief job is to save teeth, to make them last as long as possible.

He exercises the greatest ingenuity in making repairs so that the tooth may be saved and not removed. This is typically Saturn work.

Not only the structure with which he works, the teeth, and the effort to save them as long as possible, but also the painstaking care with detail, and the slow laborious work with minute cavities, are typical of Saturn. I believe, therefore, we are safe in saying that dentistry is mainly a Saturn occupation. And to be a good dentist the Saturn thought-cells should be active.

It is also work requiring mechanical skill, and the building of something, and therefore needs active Mars thought-cells. Even not to mind the pain others suffer, providing it is for their own good, also requires active Mars thought-cells. Neither Mars nor Saturn conduces to sensitivity. Both are harsh, and do not too greatly mind the suffering of others. And a dentist should not be hypersensitive.

The doctor with Jupiter prominent can radiate warmth, geniality, and a confident optimism which encourages his patient and gives people confidence in his skill. But the dentist needs something not necessary for a doctor. He needs to keep people entertained while he drills their teeth and hammers repair material into cavities. He wants to take their mind off what he is doing as much as possible, and this he does, if he is competent, through interesting conversation.

A dentist does not need to be a good mixer out of office hours; but if he is to keep his patients coming back he should be a social fellow who apparently is interested in their affairs. That is one reason he needs active Venus thought-cells. The other is that on these thought-cells he must depend for good taste and artistic appreciation; and it is his job to give people teeth that are artistic and pleasing to behold. Artificial teeth must be not merely good looking in themselves, but they must be in proper taste for the individual who wears them.

The ailments of people, including the difficulties they have with their teeth, come under the rule of the sixth house. The dentist depends on people with sick teeth for his livelihood. And unless he has active sixth house thought-cells he is not sufficiently attracted to people who are in some manner ailing to get patronage. Thus a dentist as well as a doctor or a nurse should have an active sixth house.

The Luck Factor

Primarily as the success he has with teeth determines his prosperity, at least in so far as his patients give him advertising, the luck he will attract in associating with them is primarily indicated by the aspects of Saturn, which rules teeth. If Saturn should be in good aspect to the Moon, or the Moon the best planet in the chart, it indicates success with women patients. If it is in good aspect with Mercury, or if Mercury is the best planet in the chart, the success would be outstanding with children. If Mars were in good aspect to Saturn, or were the best planet in the chart, the dentist would do well to take up practice in a neighborhood where mechanics live. If Neptune were the best planet in the chart, or even if it were in good aspect to Saturn, he might do better in a locality where moving picture patronage could be contacted. Or if Jupiter were a good planet, or harmoniously aspecting Saturn, instead of working to build up trade among the common people, he could with advantage establish himself where it would be possible to contact professional people, or people of some wealth.

Of secondary importance as a luck factor is the sixth house. If the sixth house is badly afflicted, the patients he gets will be difficult cases, and he will have many obstacles to overcome. Yet the table shows that much more than half of the dentists analyzed had a sixth house more discordant than harmonious. Therefore if the ruler of the sixth has at least one strong harmonious aspect, or several weak harmonious aspects, even if badly afflicted otherwise, there would be no serious deterrent to taking up dentistry.

There is another factor, not analyzed in the table, but of considerable importance in following any of the professions. It is the harmony or discord of the seventh house thought-cells. We have not analyzed it because if the natural aptitudes for dentistry are strong, and Saturn and the sixth house have some harmony, an afflicted seventh house should not stand in the way of following this profession. And it would cause difficulty in any profession, or any calling that depends upon close contact with patients or clients.

A harmonious seventh house indicates thought-cell activity that tends to cause those served to be satisfied with the work done. But an afflicted seventh house attracts those who are apt to be dissatisfied with the services no matter how good those services may be. Clients or patients of a person who has a heavily afflicted seventh house are inclined to be troublesome. And the nature of their troublesomeness is indicated by the ruler of the seventh and the planets afflicting it.

We tabulated the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were located in these charts of 100 doctors; but no sign stood out with sufficient prominence to warrant special mention.

The June, 1937, issue of American Astrology Magazine gives the result of tabulating the Sun-signs of 7,000 physicians, as compared with a prominence normal, which in turn was based upon the birth-dates of 66,000 prominent persons. This gives Capricorn as high, with 9.75% above the normal, and Sagittarius as low, with 10.48% below the normal. Rather surprisingly, Scorpio, which usually has been considered the physician's sign, is next lowest, with 10.15% below normal.

Running through a number of issues of American Astrology Magazine during 1936, there were Sun-sign analyses of the charts of 6,877 physicians. They were variously grouped according to their specialty, and in addition to the sign of the Sun, the Sun-decanates also were tabulated, and the sign in which Mars was found.

While there was a variation from the average, much as is shown above in relation to the prominence normal, in none of these different analyses did any sign appear low enough that it would warrant discouraging a person born with the Sun in the sign from endeavoring to become a physician; nor did any sign appear sufficiently high to constitute it a birth-chart constant.

In the matter of Mars being prominent in the birth-chart, however, it stands out so conspicuously in the 100 doctors' charts we analyzed, that it would seem folly for any person not having this planet prominent in his birth-chart to attempt healing as his profession. Building and tearing down are activities typical of the Mars thought-cells. And only those who have these Mars thought-cells sufficiently active are capable of making a success of an occupation calling for either destructive or constructive ability.

In addition to the skill in surgery, in the administration of medicine, and in other methods of repairing the body, which active Mars thought-cells give; the mental and personal atmosphere of the physician, through their power of suggestion, are very important factors in the work of healing. A prominent Jupiter in the birth-chart maps thought-cells which give warmth, geniality, and a confident and optimistic attitude which are communicated to the patient.

It is not merely what the healer says to the patient; but those most successful, as a rule, have a bearing and a personal atmosphere which gives the patient confidence that the doctor will be able to affect a cure.

Furthermore, it is difficult for those who do not have quite active Jupiter thought-cells to get into any profession. A prominent Jupiter not only causes the individual to feel that life holds something better for him than a manual occupation; but the work of the thought-cells so mapped tends to attract to the individual the opportunity to prepare himself for a profession, or to get into salesmanship work or merchandising.

Jupiter is the planet of that good-will and geniality which attract patronage. The thought-cells mapped by a prominent Jupiter, therefore, not only help the individual to get into professional work, but give the assurance that people will like him well enough, and have sufficient confidence in him, that they will employ his services.

Among the doctors whose charts we have analyzed have been a number of chiropractors. These, and those who depend much upon electrical devices and high-frequency rays, have Uranus conspicuously prominent in their charts of birth. Uranus also seems to favor new and unusual methods.

Those who rely upon Naturopathic treatments, Stellar Healing,

Massage and similar drugless methods of healing, commonly have Neptune conspicuously prominent in their charts of birth; as do those who give Metaphysical, New Thought, Divine, Spiritual and other forms of absent treatments.

People who continuously are brought in contact with sickness must have unusually active thought-cells occupying the sixth compartment of their astral bodies. This does not imply that a planet must actually occupy the sixth house; but that, at least, the planet ruling the cusp of the sixth must receive powerful aspects.

While only a portion of the doctors are associated with hospitals, yet the sick-rooms which they constantly visit are frequently places of confinement and restriction to the patient; sufficiently so to come under the influence of the twelfth house. At least, the thought-cells related to the twelfth house in the charts of doctors we have analyzed show outstanding activity.

So far as Natural Aptitude is concerned, one who intends to become a doctor should have within his unconscious mind thought-cells such as are mapped by a prominent Mars, a prominent Jupiter, an active sixth house and an active twelfth house.

The Luck Factor

In the matter of so-called luck, it is better, though not essential, to have Mars and Jupiter each receiving at least one harmonious aspect. Mars is the ruler of the healing profession, and its aspects have some significance in reference to the harmony or discord attracted in such work.

The luck which will be attracted in association with the illness of people is indicated by the harmony or discord of the ruler of the sixth house; and the luck which will be attracted in association with hospitals or rooms of confinement is indicated by the harmony or discord of the ruler of the twelfth house.

There are those who follow the healing profession who have only discordant aspects to the rulers of the sixth and twelfth, but these are at a great disadvantage. Skill must be exceptional to overcome the handicap of the continuous difficulties thus attracted; and those who are outstanding in the healing profession have at least one powerful harmonious aspect, along with discordant ones, to the ruler of the sixth and to the ruler of the twelfth.

Charts with planet in third house	58	58%
Charts with third house more discordant than harmonious	70	70%
Charts with third house more harmonious than discordant	30	30%

A tabulation of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant are found reveals there are more draftsmen in Leo and Cancer, with almost as many in Libra and Pisces; while, Aries, Taurus and Sagittarius contain fewest, with only about two-thirds as many as in the four favored signs. Yet as many successful draftsmen are born under Aries, Taurus and Sagittarius, this does not warrant discouraging a person from taking up the vocation simply because he is born under a strong influence from one or all of these three signs.

Drafting is a form of mental expression requiring dexterity, alertness, and clear-cut objective thinking such as active Mercury thought-cells alone can afford. Mercury rules the nerve currents; and if there is to be fine co-ordination between the images in the mind and muscular action, there must be sufficient brain-cell activity and nervous control, such as is present only among those who have Mercury prominent in their birth-charts.

The muscles are ruled by Mars, and skill in their use, such as a draftsman must employ, requires that the Aggressive thought-cells in the astral body shall be more than commonly active. Moreover, most draftsmanship is employed in the precise plotting of something for the purpose of gaining more ready knowledge of it, or in plans or designs from which something is to be built. This implies a knowledge of mechanics or of structural work which is easily acquired only by those who have the Aggressive thought-cells active, as indicated by a prominent birth-chart Mars.

Successful drafting requires that the sheets when finished shall be neat and attractive in appearance. Proper lettering is often an important feature. The artistic appearance essential to success in this work is chiefly made possible through the activity of the Venus thought-cells. However, even when the Venus thought-cells are not so active, if those mapped by its upper-octave, Neptune, are quite active, the work does not suffer in appearance. Thus we can say that either Venus or Neptune, and better, both, should be prominent in the chart of one who expects to follow drafting as a calling. Drafting, like writing, is a third house activity; and if one is to do sufficient work to make a success of this occupation, he must have enough activity on the part of the thought-cells mapped by the third house to attract it. Those who do drafting, who do much writing, or who study consistently, not merely while going to school, but after leaving it, must have third house thought-cells activity of the kind which is mapped by the ruler of the house powerfully aspected.

The Luck Factor

Like writing and teaching, drafting seems to come under the general rulership of Mercury. And like these two other Mercury occupations, it is carried out amid a wide variety of associations; permitting considerable choice, which can be utilized in the selection of the luck factors.

It is, of course, better from the luck standpoint if Mercury has at least one good aspect, though this is not essential to becoming a successful draftsman. When afflicted, Mercury tends to attract difficulty through little errors and oversights, not only upon the part of the person in whose chart it is thus afflicted, but upon the part of others. Thus to prevent misfortune in an occupation ruled by Mercury, an individual with this planet heavily afflicted in his birth-chart, and particularly when it is also afflicted by a progressed aspect, must take unusual care to check against little errors on his part, and to take precaution that the errors of others do not cause serious difficulty.

Of secondary importance from the luck standpoint is the harmony of the thought-cells of the third house. 70% of the charts analyzed had the third house more discordant than harmonious; but if the ruler of the third house receives at least one strong harmonious aspect, or several weak harmonious aspects, success will be more assured. The more harmonious the aspects made to the ruler of the third the better the luck attracted in this, or other, third house occupation.

But even when Mercury and the third house are severely afflicted, if the thought-cells mapped by them are active enough to give marked natural aptitude for this work, it often is possible to select a field in which to utilize the drafting talent that will attract considerable luck.

Drafting is employed in map making of all kinds relative to real estate, and in mining and the development of natural resources and basic utilities. To the extent the planet Saturn is harmonious in the birth-chart would good fortune tend to be attracted in employing drafting or other talents in connection with such matters, or in the work of an architect.

In designing and installing machinery, and in tool making, draftsmanship plays an important part. The luck that could be expected to be attracted through such associations is indicated in the birth-chart by the amount of harmony or discord shown by the planet Mars. That is, if the Mars thought-cells in the astral body are pronouncedly discordant, any continuous association with machinery or sharp tools would greatly increase the tendency to accident and strife. On the other hand, if the Mars thought-cells are harmonious, the association with tools and machinery gives them additional energy and opportunity to work from the inner plane to attract fortunate events into the life.

The luck that would be attracted in association with aviation, air-conditioning and the movies is largely indicated by the aspects made to Neptune in the birth-chart. In association with radio work, or television, it would be determined by the aspects to the planet Pluto.

Draftsmanship, or other occupation, in which there is constant work relating to electricity, would be influenced in the luck factor by the aspects made to the planet Uranus. That is, even mental association with things electrical adds energy to the Uranus thought-cells within the astral body, which enables them to do more work from the inner plane. And the fortune or misfortune of the events attracted through this inner-plane work is chiefly determined by the harmony or discord of these Uranus thought-cells.

Electrician

Birth-charts of electricians analyzed	100	100%
Charts with Uranus prominent.....	100	100%
Charts with Pluto prominent	100	100%
Charts with Mercury prominent	98	98%
Charts with Mars prominent	97	97%
Charts with Mars aspecting Uranus	71	71%

In the analysis of these 100 charts by the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant, Libra and Sagittarius were found to be highest, and Taurus, Gemini and Pisces lowest with not quite two-thirds as many. Next to the highest were Virgo and Scorpio, with Aries and Cancer trailing closely. Aquarius, even though ruled by Uranus, the planet of electricity, had only two more than Pisces and three more than Taurus and Gemini.

In addition to the specific abilities conferred by Uranus, as this planet is the ruler of electricity, only those who have it prominent in their charts of birth seem strongly enough attracted to things of an electrical nature to make close association with them a portion of their daily lives. For instance, if you will turn to the analysis of telephone operators you will find that Uranus was prominent in nearly all the charts of those analyzed who follow that vocation. And it is stated that the prominence of Uranus in those charts probably had little to do with the magnetic power of this planet to influence others, but more likely related to the association between the planet and gadgets, such as the switchboard affords, and to electricity, which Uranus rules; which are essential parts of a telephone system.

This is even more true as applied to electricians, because magnetic personalities seem even less essential to them than to telephone operators, because the variety of gadgets they handle is much greater, and because the association with electricity is even more intimate.

Yet instead of catering to a wide public, such as is ruled by the Moon, and keeping it pleased and comfortable, the electrician is called upon to exercise constant ingenuity in repairing, installing, and adjusting a vast assortment of gadgets ranging in size from huge generators and dynamos down to minute and delicate instruments. Thus the inventive ability which is distinctive of Uranus is called into play in the everyday work of an electrician more pronouncedly than in most vocations.

The prominence of the planet Pluto in the charts of electricians evidently does not relate to this planet's rulership over group activity of people, but to its significance where hidden forces and the inside of things are concerned. Pluto is the planet of inner-plane forces, and of intra-atomic energies. To determine precisely where the domain of Uranus ends and that of Pluto begins will require painstaking research, but the evidence to date indicates that the influence of one somewhat overlaps and blends into the influence of the other.

Thus it seems that electricity and electromagnetic fields under the more ordinarily observed conditions are ruled strictly by Uranus. But when an alternating current is given so high a frequency that the electromagnetic fields produced by the moving electric impulses do not fold back, but become electromagnetic waves, such as those used in radio, the energy then seems to come under the domain of Pluto. Of course, the transformation of one kind of energy into another kind having a different planetary rulership is not unusual, for mechanical (Mars) energy can be used in the generation of electricity. But in such conversion the line of demarcation is rather clear.

The electromagnetic radiations of the energies generated in man's nervous system may, in various degrees, be converted into the high-velocity energy of the inner plane. Because the two planes can exchange motions only through such electromagnetic forces, we call them Boundary-Line energies; and after the conversion from Boundary-Line energies to inner-plane energies is complete we consider them then ruled by Pluto.

Yet Pluto, as well as Neptune and Uranus and some of the other planets, also has rulership over certain electromagnetic radiations which may convert some of their-energies into those of the inner plane. That is, Pluto not only rules inner-plane energies, but also certain of the locity not greater than light, readily can communicate their motions to substance having higher-than-light velocity. As Pluto has a higher side and a lower side which are quite distinct, I believe we are warranted in concluding that it rules not only inner-plane energies, but the Boundary-Line energies which most readily contact them.

The electrician is not called upon to understand anything about inner-plane energies, but his work does require that he become familiar with unseen electromagnetic forces and visualize how they act. He is not required to measure cosmic rays, which to penetrate the electromagnetic field surrounding the earth at Mahur, India, must possess 17 billion electron volts, according to Dr. Millikan. But he must be able to ascertain the probable current generated in a telephone wire one hundred feet distant, for instance, from a high-tension power line carrying a given number of volts. And while neither the telephone wire nor the electricity carried by the power line are ruled by Pluto, it does seem that Pluto prominent in an electrician's chart facilitates his grasp of how unseen forces, including those electromagnetic, operate at a distance.

The prominence of Mercury indicates that only those with considerable intellectual ability are suited to become electricians.

The prominence of Mars relates to the mechanical ability that must be employed. The Mars-Uranus aspect being so prominent indicates that mechanical ingenuity is at a premium among those who become electricians. Mars is the mechanical and constructive planet, and Uranus is the planet of ingenuity. Uranus aspecting other planets tends to give ingenuity relative to the matters these other planets rule. Thus its aspect to Mars favors ingenuity relating to mechanics and building things.

The Luck Factor

As electricity is ruled by Uranus, we must judge the luck factor chiefly from the aspects to this planet. This does not mean that a chart with heavy afflictions to Uranus cannot succeed if Uranus also has some help. George Westinghouse, for instance, organizer of the great Westinghouse Electric Company, had Uranus in the fourth house opposition Mars, Mercury and the Sun. But he had it also trine Jupiter in the seventh house, which always, from his youth on, enabled him to contact wealthy (Jupiter) partners (seventh) who would finance his ventures, even after he had had disastrous business difficulties. And Thomas A. Edison had Uranus semi-square Sun and square Moon; but he also had it sextile Jupiter and trine the MC. He went bankrupt on occasions, but his reputation (M.C.) as an inventor (Uranus) and his ability to contact people of wealth (Jupiter) enabled him to go ahead again after each reverse. In other words, both of these men had many misfortunes arising out of electricity, but each had such outstanding ability that they needed only an occasional "lucky break," as signified by the mentioned harmonious aspects to Uranus, to attain outstanding success.

ENGINEER

Birth-charts of engineers (electrical, civil, mechanical, construction, aviation, radio, etc.) analyzed	100	100%
Charts with Uranus prominent	100	100%
Charts with Mars prominent.....	100	100%
Charts with Saturn prominent	100	100%

Tabulating the signs in which Sun, Moon and Ascendant are found, Leo in these 100 charts runs about 30% above average, Libra, Scorpio and Cancer about 10% above average, and Pisces about 30% below the average. Yet no one should be discouraged from taking up engineering merely because the Pisces influence in his chart is outstanding; for engineers with such positions are not uncommon, as this analysis shows.

The suggestion has been put forward in various quarters that an aspect from Mars to Uranus gives engineering ability. Yet this certainly can not be considered a birth-chart constant of engineering, as in 47 of these charts no such aspect was present.

Almost any type of engineering requires ingenuity and the ability to solve problems. Such ability is present to the extent the Individualistic thought-cells are active, as mapped by a prominent Uranus.

Engineering more commonly is employed in association with constructing something. The natural aptitude for any type of creative endeavor or building is largely measured by the amount of activity of the Aggressive thought-cells within the unconscious mind, mapped by the planet Mars. Only those with a prominent birth-chart Mars should engage in creative work, or in engineering.

To become a successful engineer, an individual must be prepared to shoulder responsibility, and to work hard and persistently. He must have system and foresight, be able to reason logically, and to make successful plans. Only those who have the thought-cells active such as are mapped by a prominent birth-chart Saturn, possess such qualifications.

The Luck Factor

Granted that an individual has Uranus, Mars and Saturn all quite prominent in his chart of birth, and thus has natural aptitude for becoming an engineer, he will do well to look carefully to the luck factor. And as in engineering there is a wide variety of associations with which the work can be performed, one preparing to enter this field usually has ample opportunity to select conditions such as will attract much misfortune or considerable luck.

The luck attracted, in each instance, is determined by the planetary ruler of the things with which the engineer is chiefly concerned. In so far, for instance, as there is association with machines, the thought-cells mapped by Mars are involved; and even in those types of engineering work which are not primarily concerned with engines, such as mining engineering, structural engineering, electrical engineering, etc., machines frequently play an important part.

In addition to aviation engineering, which increasingly makes calls for outstanding talent, there is now some demand for engineers who are familiar with air-conditioning, for those who can handle certain problems in connection with the motion picture industry, and for others who are sufficiently familiar with the oil industry. These associations all are ruled by the planet Neptune, and if this is a prominent and well-aspected planet in the birth-chart, it indicates the fortune would be better in one of these fields.

As a field for the engineer who has a prominent and well-aspected Pluto, there is at present radio engineering; while the future holds forth the promise of television and the transmission of power by electromagnetic waves. The force of the cosmic ray, and that which holds the electrons and atoms together, as yet are merely the subjects of experiment. But when the time arrives when such invisible forces are utilized commercially, the engineer with a powerful and well-aspected Pluto in his chart will be the one most fortunate in association with them. As chemistry also is ruled by Pluto, the luck attracted in association with chemical engineering is chiefly to be appraised from the aspects to this planet.

To the extent the thought-cells mapped by Uranus are active and harmonious, is luck apt to be attracted in association either with electricity or with intricate gadgets and new mechanical inventions. For the special ability to understand electricity and handle it, look to the prominence of Uranus in the birth-chart. But for the luck or misfortune apt to be attracted in following the profession of electrical engineer, look to the aspects which the planet Uranus receives.

Civil engineering and those types in which land, timber, or other natural resources are chiefly involved, bring the things ruled by Saturn to the fore. If the thought-cells mapped in the birth-chart by Saturn are discordant, such association will bring an almost unceasing train of difficulties. But if Saturn is well-aspected, this type of work will bring advantages and opportunity for advancement. In the development of irrigation projects, or flood control and soil erosion hindrances, the Saturn associations would be typical.

The engineering work associated with the development of hydro-electric power, would bring in a luck factor ruled by Saturn, and also another luck factor, that mapped by Uranus, in reference to the electricity.

Mining engineering, while the mining part proper, and the removal of coal or ore from the ground, has a luck factor ruled by Saturn, also commonly involves to a somewhat less degree a Mars luck factor, because of the constant use of machinery; and a Uranus luck factor due to the use of electricity as a source of power in modern mining operations.

The luck factor in mechanical engineering is clearly that of Mars. To the extent the Aggressive thought-cells mapped by this planet in the birth-chart are harmonious will good fortune be attracted in the use of tools, machines and engines; and to the extent these thought-cells are discordant is there a tendency to accident and other types of misfortune in such use.

Structural engineering has a luck factor ruled by Mars. This represents the constructive activity, the use of machines and tools, and the structural iron work. Yet it also has a Saturn luck factor. The concrete commonly used in association with structural iron, and the building itself, are ruled by Saturn.

Such charts as we have of those who have made a success of building city skyscrapers have both a prominent Mars and a prominent Saturn. In one instance, while exceptionally prominent, they were terribly afflicted. Yet this individual had a fine seventh house, and made a fortune while in partnership with another man. He had charge of the engineering and building part of the work, and permitted his partner to have exclusive charge of the financial part. As soon as the partnership broke up, which it eventually did, he commenced to lose money and have misfortune. This is mentioned to indicate the manner in which one man, with exceptional ability for structural engineering, overcame for many years, the afflictions of Mars and Saturn in his chart of birth.

Farmer

Charts with planet in fourth house	49	49%
Charts with fourth house more discordant than harmonious	58	58%
Charts with fourth house more harmonious than discordant	40	40%

The tabulation of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were found in these 100 charts brought out some quite unexpected data. For instance, it has generally been held that farmers were more apt to be those with these influences in earthy signs; yet in 45 of these charts the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were in other than earthy signs; which shows the earthy well below average.

Curiously enough, and also contrary to prevalent opinion, not only Virgo but Libra ran highest, with 40% above average. Perhaps the fact that Libra is the exaltation of Saturn, the farmer planet, has something to do with its high rating; yet the signs ruled and co-ruled by Saturn, Capricorn and Aquarius, ran low. Virgo, the harvest sign, running high was in conformity with prevalent opinion.

Aquarius ran lowest, with 24% below average, and Taurus, Scorpio and Capricorn next lowest, with 12% below average. Yet Taurus has commonly been considered a farming sign, and Libra a sign avoiding agriculture.

Saturn has always been considered the planet of farmers, and was prominent in all of these charts. It is an occupation in which the labor is hard and monotonous and the hours of work long. In the past, at least, it has meant giving up some of the conveniences of city life, a lack of which is typically Saturn.

The farmer, to be successful, must have both patience and planning ability, which only those possess in the required degree who have the thought-cells active in their unconscious minds such as are mapped by a prominent Saturn. The farmer must plan to plant his crop at the most favorable time, and take into consideration probable prices he will receive for various products, and when they will be ready for market. His income, instead of being a rather continuous supply, comes merely at those intervals when his stock or his produce is fit for market. Many farmers are dependent upon a crop that is harvested only at one time; and they must wait twelve months between sales, and so systematically plan their expenditures that the income received at one time must last a year. Only those with active Saturn thought-cells have the patience and foresight to make a success of such a life.

The Moon is the general ruler of nutrition; and the farmer supplies the food of the world. Quite commonly, in addition to crops raised directly from the soil, the farmer depends also in some degree upon raising animals large or small. Perhaps even the looking after the grain in the fields, and taking pains it gets a fair start, and is not choked out by weeds, consists of looking after the weak and helpless. At any rate, raising chickens and live stock of the larger kinds requires a certain amount of mothering capacity. And such capacity, as is clearly indicated in the charts of nurses, depends upon the activity of the Domestic thought-cells, ruled by the Moon.

Pluto is the planet of universal welfare and of mass production. It is the upper-octave expression of the Moon's influence. In the looking after the young and helpless of both plants and animals there is in some degree the universal welfare attitude. But more particularly is a farmer's work associated with mass production; mass production of fruits and grains and vegetables and stock. Thus we find that farmers have the thought-cells mapped by Pluto quite prominent, and I believe we are warranted in discouraging any person from taking up farming who has neither Moon nor Pluto prominent in his chart, or whose chart lacks a prominent Saturn.

However, as quite a number of people with Sun, Moon or Ascendant in Aquarius succeed in farming, even though this is the least numerous of the signs which follow this occupation, I do not think we are warranted in discouraging Aquarian people, or those born under any other sign, merely on that account, from taking up farming.

People who do not have active fourth-house thought-cells do not have persistent association with the land. Their thought-cell activities attract them to some different environment, which is ruled by the house of their charts mapping active thought-cells. That is, they become associated with writing, with journeys, with entertainment, with business, or whatever in their charts is represented by a house of outstanding activity.

As farming requires incessant contact with the land, any person who does not have the ruler of the fourth house powerfully aspected is unsuited to it.

The Luck Factor

As Saturn is the ruler of farmers, the aspects in the birth-chart to Saturn are significant of the luck that would be attracted while following this occupation.

But of at least as much importance, and perhaps more, in reference to the luck factor, are the aspects received by the ruler of the fourth house. If there is no harmonious aspect to the ruler of the fourth, the luck attracted while associated with the land will be rather uniformly bad. Yet, as the table shows, it is not necessary to have the fourth house ruler receiving nothing but good aspects to have sufficient luck in this occupation to do fairly well.

Handling live stock of the larger kinds, especially where range riding is involved, has a strong element of Mars; and for such work the Mars thought-cells must be considered in determining the luck factor. But in general, the luck with large animals is to be determined from the ruler of the twelfth house; and the luck with small animals, such as rabbits, chickens and pigs, from the ruler of the sixth house.

Charts with planet in ninth house	53	53%

Charts with ninth house more discordant than harmonious	59 59%
Charts with ninth house more harmonious than discordant	40 40%

An analysis of the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant in these 100 charts gives the lead to Leo, Libra, Sagittarius and Capricorn; with Gemini and Pisces taking low places: The difference between the high and the low, however, is not significant enough to point to any sign as a birth-chart constant of lawyers. Nor is it important enough that people with Sun, Moon or Ascendant in Pisces or Gemini should be discouraged from taking up law, provided the indicated planets are prominent and the ninth house is sufficiently active.

As the practice of law so commonly involves a contest, we also tabulated the activity of the seventh house; but in these 100 charts its ruler receives aspects little, if any, stronger than that of the average of charts. The activity of the ninth house, however, stands out even more significantly than it does in the charts of writers.

Uranus is the upper-octave of Mercury. Both of these planets have a direct influence over the nerve currents and the processes of thinking in terms of words and sentences. A lawyer requires an active mind, alertness, shrewdness, the ability to study, and facility in expressing himself. In all these charts of lawyers, as mapping thought-cells whose activities give these qualifications, either Mercury or Uranus is prominent. To the extent Mercury, in any lawyer's chart is lacking in prominence, Uranus is unusually prominent; and to the extent Uranus is somewhat lacking in prominence, Mercury is unusually prominent.

The ability to work hard at monotonous work, to systematize evidence, and to reason logically is mapped by the planet Saturn. The thought-cells thus signified must be active for logical reasoning, for foresight, for ability to map out and plan a campaign, and to devise successful schemes for trapping the opposition. That is, the drudgery and painstaking toil of preparing a brief, finding flaws in evidence, and planning the method to be used in legal matters requires active Saturn thought-cells.

To present such evidence convincingly to a jury, however, requires a very different group of thought-cells. To read human nature correctly, and through oratory to sway the minds of others, requires active thought-cells of the Uranus type. Upon such thought-cells also must depend such brilliance as is used in questioning witnesses, or in devising unusual methods to win the desired result.

For patronage in any of the professions, as well as in selling more tangible goods, the good fellowship of the Jupiter thought-cells must largely be dependent upon. Jupiter gets the work to do because people like the individual who has the thought-cells it maps prominent. Yet, as indicated by 11% of these lawyers not having the Jupiter thought-cells unusually active, an individual can make a success of law, if he has enough ability otherwise, with very little help from the thought-cells of good will.

That is, even if people do not care for him, if he gets a reputation for winning cases, he will get their patronage. Also, he may do valuable work in a law firm, without much direct contact with patronage.

Not infrequently, a partnership in which a lawyer strongly Mercury-Saturn in type is joined to one of the Uranus-Jupiter type proves quite successful. The Mercury-Saturn individual is an authority on business law and on legal matters in general. He lays the plans, works up the cases, and looks after details. The Jupiter-Uranus member of the firm meets people, attracts business to the firm, and when a case is in court, does the pleading before the judge or jury.

Jupiter prominent in a chart assists the individual to acquire a profession. But when Jupiter is not prominent, a prominent Sun may enable him to become a lawyer, as it did in eleven of these charts; for when Jupiter was not prominent the Sun was.

It seems, in addition to the prominence of the planets indicated, that it would be unwise to encourage any person, the thought-cells in whose astral body mapped by the ninth house were not more than normally active, to enter the profession of law. Association with the courts is attracted by the thought-cells mapped in the ninth section of the astral form. If these thought-cells are not unusually active there will be little association with legal matters, and therefore little success in connection with them.

The Luck Factor

Uranus, probably more than any other planet, is the ruler of lawyers. From the luck standpoint, therefore, it is better to have at least one strong and harmonious aspect to Uranus. This will give favorable "breaks" in the contacts with other people often enough to prevent the obstacles to be overcome being too consistently difficult.

But as the court, the judge and the jury are ruled by the ninth house, it is probably even more important from the luck standpoint, that all the aspects to the ruler of the ninth house should not be discordant ones. If all are discordant, whenever the matter of favor comes up, there will be a tendency on the part of the court or the jury to decide against the lawyer.

On the other hand, as shown by 59 of the charts having stronger discordant aspects to the ruler of the ninth than harmonious ones, it is not essential that the ninth house thought-cells be predominantly harmonious. The more active they are, the more important such matters will be. And if, at the same time, he can be assured of getting the "breaks" in his favor even part of the time, and his ability is outstanding, as shown by the prominence of the lawyer planets, he should be able to make quite a success. Outstanding personages in the legal profession nearly always have at least one powerful harmonious aspect to the ruler of the ninth.

If Jupiter is particularly harmonious in the chart, he could specialize in law for merchants or professional men. If Saturn were exceptionally well aspected in his chart, he would have the luck factor in his favor if he became an insurance lawyer, or looked after the legal interests of miners or real estate men.

With good aspects to Venus his legal practice might be given a luck turn through specializing in affectional matters; a divorce lawyer, for instance, if the seventh house also showed outstanding activity. Or if the Sun were well aspected in his chart, he could direct his efforts toward getting the patronage of politicians, or executives. With good aspects to Mars or Pluto, he could become a criminal lawyer.

In law, as in most other matters, if an individual has sufficient ability, it is possible for him to gain success in spite of persistent unlucky occurrences. But if he can associate with something, in the practice of his profession, which tends to attract luck to him, he can attain a higher success, and more surely, and with less struggle.

In a tabulation of these 100 charts by the signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant, we found that Libra was highest with 32% above the average, Scorpio next highest, and then Leo. The lowest sign was Capricorn, with 36% below average. Taurus was next lowest, and then Pisces. No sign was conspicuous enough, however, to be considered a constant, and none low enough that a person should be discouraged from becoming a machinist merely because of the prominence of some sign. We were not able to pick out any special house whose activity was significant in the charts of machinists.

It takes the ability conferred by the thought-cells mapped in the unconscious mind by Mars to handle tools skillfully. And it takes the energy thus mapped to give the desire to build something or to destroy something; and the more Mars energy is present the greater the desire to express through some constructive or destructive channel.

The energy mapped by a prominent Mars, even when the planet is greatly afflicted, can be diverted into constructive work of some kind. And if it is not thus put to constructive work, we may be sure it will find an outlet in some destructive activity. The gangster who beats up those who do not bow to his dictates, who robs a bank at the point of a gun, or who holds up pedestrians on the highway is expressing Mars energy in a way that is inimical to society, and which probably will bring the loss of his freedom if not of his life, because that Mars energy was not conditioned earlier in life to find a satisfactory expression in something constructive.

Those who have youngsters in charge accept a grave responsibility, and especially so when one of their charges has a powerful and greatly afflicted birth-chart Mars. In such a case it is imperative that an outlet be found for the Mars energy which is not detrimental to others, but trains at least indirectly for some useful creative work, and which gives the youth a feeling of pride and relieves the creative drive in a feeling of satisfaction. We have much reason to believe that any youth of normal intelligence, taken early enough, and handled correctly, instead of becoming a hoodlum or bandit, no matter how powerful and afflicted Mars may be in his chart, can be made to take pride in being a useful citizen. But only through encouraging, and not repressing, the expression of the creative energies and diverting them through appeals to whatever other urges may be powerful, into constructive channels that give them satisfaction.

Mars energy can express through any type of creative work, and is required for creative art or creative intellectual effort. And even to brain workers, it gives a facility in the use of tools if they devote any time to handling them. But when Saturn and Uranus also are prominent the creative ability expresses with facility through mechanical lines.

Saturn inclines to laborious types of work, even when they are purely mental. And when prominent it gives the persistence to undergo the apprenticeship or other training necessary properly to learn a trade. A machinist is called upon to do heavy labor. The machines on which he works are ruled by Mars, as are the tools which he uses. There is nothing soft, yielding, or of the Venus nature about his work. It has the harshness and the concreteness of Mars and Saturn. And to learn the trade the individual must apply himself persistently over a period of years.

While Mars gives activity and skill, it is the thought-cells mapped by Saturn that demand care and the utmost in precision. Mars alone is inclined to work rapidly, and to employ dexterity. But the painstaking attention to detail which makes a competent machinist is conferred by the energies mapped by a prominent Saturn. And Saturn also enables the machinist to lay his work and plan its details in advance, so that each operation shall be performed in the order that will give the greatest advantage.

A workman in the assembly line of an automobile plant may have Uranus prominent in his birth-chart; but if his duty requires only that he tighten a certain nut, or some other operation that he does over and over endlessly, he is not using the Uranus thought-cells, and they are apt to cause great restlessness. Instead, he is using the thought-cells of Mars and Saturn; and the more routine the job is, and the more monotonous, the greater his need for active thought-cells such as are mapped by Saturn to hold him to his job. One with Saturn lacking in prominence develops nervous disorders if a job is too monotonous.

But in the ordinary work of a machinist there are ever new problems that require solving. And while Mercury must be prominent enough to give intelligence, and a certain amount of alertness, the ingenuity to invent some new way of doing something, or of making a repair, or of handling some new mechanical situation, requires that the thought-cells mapped by Uranus shall be prominent.

The heavier types of routine work requires only a prominent Saturn and Mars, but the more delicate types of work, which especially require the use of new gadgets or their repair, require also a prominent Uranus. And if the work is connected with electrical devices, or with automobiles, which are ruled by Uranus, the need for this planet's influence is all the greater.

As in the work of a machinist the handling of figures plays a part and precise measurements must be made, the Intellectual thought-cells mapped by Mercury should be sufficiently active. In other words, while a machinist is not required to take a classical education, nevertheless, in his mechanical education there are innumerable things he must learn and not forget, and to do his work he should not be mentally dull.

The Luck Factor

The luck that may be expected while following this vocation is chiefly to be determined from the aspects of Mars, which rules both the work and its associations. As automobiles are ruled by Uranus, Uranus well aspected in the chart, and particularly if there is a favorable aspect from Mars to Uranus, indicates good luck in association with automobiles. And as Neptune rules aircraft, to the extent Neptune is well aspected will associating with them prove fortunate.

The aspects of Mars itself, however, mainly determine the luck to be expected in association with tools and machinery in general. Yet Uranus and Saturn cannot be entirely ignored; for in the matter of accident, while not nearly so significant as Mars, they also some of the time play a part. That is, if the accident planets--Mars, Saturn and Uranus--are too heavily afflicted, the individual should avoid, as much as possible, situations where accidents readily happen. In that case, instead of actually working with tools or in a machine shop, the individual may be able to capitalize on his natural mechanical aptitudes through demonstrating a machine, through selling machinery, or through some other avenue, as indicated by a harmonious planet in his chart, where the hazard of injury is considerably less.

We tabulated the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were located in these charts of 100 movie stars; but no sign stood out with sufficient prominence to be significant, and certainly not sufficiently to be a birth-chart constant of movie actors.

Something more than mere beauty is required to get into pictures; in fact, a glance at the photographs of the leading movie picture stars is convincing that beauty of the classical type is not a requisite. That which all of them do have, however, is personality. Either on the stage or on the screen, those most successful have a personality which grips and holds the attention of the audience.

Such a personality must be energetic. It must have either the force or the vivacity which is the outward expression of unusually active thought-cells of the type mapped by Mars. And if it is to fascinate, and hold others by a spell which is something more than ordinary charm, the thought-cells mapped by Uranus also must be unusually active.

Because the name of those who aspire to a movie career is multitude, and because the salary of such as reach eminence in the profession is enormous, it is one of the most highly competitive of all vocations. And to meet this competition, to fight to get proper recognition, to prevent those of less talent but of more aggression from showing the actor to one side, there must be present the combative qualities mapped by a prominent birth-chart Mars.

Mars is the planet of creative energy, and to the extent an art is creative, must the thought-cells mapped by Mars be active. Furthermore, contrary to public opinion, when movie actors work, often it is during long hours and under great pressure. Over limited periods of time, great drains are made upon their energies, and they must be able to withstand fatigue, the criticism of directors and associates, and other difficulties which would discourage any but those of a fighting spirit. Such is the significance of Mars prominent in the birth-charts of 98% of the movie stars.

An actor's task is not merely to feel the part he is playing, and portray it accurately. To be successful, he must make others intensely feel as he does; he must be able to sway them emotionally. And nothing gives the individual so much power to influence the minds and conduct of others as do the thought-cells mapped by the planet Uranus. Even though no electromagnetic radiations emanate from the actor on the screen, the audience instantly, through some subtle sympathy, recognizes, and responds to, the screen portrayal of a magnetic personality.

Merely a cut and dried rendering of the action and the words of the script, never promoted an actor to stardom. He must have the originality to devise a better method of portraying the part given him. Ever must he be on the alert to find new methods by which to improve his work. This necessity for ingeniousness and the ability to handle portrayals in new and better ways, is shown by Uranus, the planet of originality, being prominent in 94% of the movie star charts.

Uranus, as is commonly recognized, is also the most unconventional of all the ten planets, and the most disruptive to domestic relations. Its prominence in the charts of movie people, together with the prominence of Neptune, which not content with imperfection, ever seeks the ideal, no doubt accounts for the number of divorces among screen celebrities, and the great publicity attached to them.

The activity of the thought-cells thus mapped also accounts for the well known fact that nearly all movie people are interested in astrology and some form of occultism. When the thought-cells mapped by Uranus are active enough to quite dominate those mapped by the other planets, they enable the actor to devise eccentric or unusually original parts. Such parts, for instance, as those played by Charlie Chaplin and Harold Lloyd, both of whom have Sun opposition Uranus.

Whether that ability be used in promoting some business, in getting recognition for one's personality, in the rendition of a musical symphony, in the portrayal of characters in fiction, or upon the movie set, the measure of an individual's dramatic ability is the prominence of Neptune in his chart of birth. There are those who have attained to movie stardom, through special fitness for certain parts, or who have other natural aptitudes of outstanding merit, yet who have little real dramatic talent. But when the thought-cells mapped by Neptune are quite active, it gives facility to submerge the personality in widely different roles. Gloria Swanson, for instance, has it in opposition to her Ascendant, and Geraldine Farrar, who made a success as a prima donna, as well as on the screen, has it conjunction her Ascendant.

It often has appeared in print that movie actors are unintelligent. In fact, one author terms Hollywood a colony of morons. But when we find that Mercury is prominent in the charts of 79% of the stars analyzed, we can not agree with such a view. On the contrary, these are the charts of exceptionally quick-witted people, who may, or may not, be versed in the classics; but who undoubtedly possess far more than the average ability to adapt themselves successfully to new situations.

When the Intellectual thought-cells are unusually active, as shown by Mercury exceptionally prominent in the chart, they may cause the individual in his screen work to assume the role of a clever character. This was the case with Johnny Fox, the tough kid in The Covered Wagon, who has Mercury in the tenth house. And although the thought-cells mapped by Uranus in her seventh house are responsible for the eccentricity of the characters she portrays, the Intellectual thought-cells also manifest clearly in the work of Louise Fazenda, who has Mercury on the cusp of her fourth.

In addition to the prominence of Mars, Uranus, Neptune and Mercury; Venus, the planet of grace and beauty is also prominent in 74% of the movie star charts. Some of the movie talent, particularly those who play comics or take the villain parts, are far from being either graceful or beautiful. But when the thought-cells which receive energy from this planet are unusually active, as is the case when Venus is exceptionally prominent in the birth-chart, it not only lends grace and beauty, but it attracts the actor to roles in which grace of manner combines with meticulousness of dress. Such roles have been portrayed by Rudolph Valentino, Adolph Menjou, Bert Lytell and Rod La Roque, all of whom have an unusually prominent Venus.

The Luck Factor

In addition to the prominence of the five- mentioned planets, it is a great asset, especially if these planets, as often is the case, are heavily afflicted, to have a powerful and well aspected fifth house. Neptune is the planet having general rule over the moving picture industry and acting. And its aspects thus have some significance in reference to the luck attracted in. association with these industries.

But more specifically, the fifth house of a birth-chart rules entertainment, including that of stage and screen. Therefore, if the thought-cells contained in this fifth section of the unconscious mind are active and harmonious; whenever there is association with stage, screen or other type of entertainment, it affords these thought-cells opportunity, working from the inner plane, to attract good luck into the lift.

Perhaps because the competition is so strenuous, those who climb to the top in movie acting seem to have more need of the luck furnished by harmonious aspects to the house relating to their profession than do those engaged in other callings. This does not mean there must be a planet well aspected in the fifth house, but that the ruler of the fifth needs at least some favorable aspects. For instance, Norma Shearer, who has been starring in pictures for years and years, has no planet in the fifth; but Uranus, ruler of its cusp, is member of a grand trine.

In addition to the "lucky breaks" in moving picture work which a good Neptune, or of more importance, a powerful and harmonious fifth house attracts, it should be noted that the type of character portrayed is strongly influenced by the most powerful trend in the birth-chart.

Wm. S. Hart, the two-gun man, who often portrayed the part of a criminal bad man, dealing death to all and sundry, has Mars the most elevated planet in his chart, in the house of death (eighth) in square to Sun, Mercury, Venus and Saturn in the twelfth (house of crime). In the chart of Douglas Fairbanks, Sr., Mars in Aries is the most elevated planet, sextile Mercury, and trine Moon in Sagittarius, the sign of sports and athletics. Athletic stunts, chivalry, and sportsmanship marked his work. Roscoe Arbuckle, with Mars conjunction both Sun and Moon in Aries in the tenth, while doing comedian work (as Aries, more than other signs tends to do), gave it a distinctly Mars turn in its roughness and Wild West setting.

In a tabulation of these 100 charts of instrumental musicians by the signs occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant, we found that Virgo, Aquarius and Pisces were highest, with Leo next. Taurus was lowest with more than half as many as Virgo, and Capricorn was next lowest. No sign stands out as significant of ability as an instrumental musician.

While Venus is the planet of art, lending beauty and harmony to its expression, high artistic performance in any of its forms requires a surplus of creative energy, such as is given by the thought-cells mapped by Mars prominent in the birth-chart. Music, in nature, is chiefly the expression of the reproductive urge, ruled by Mars. Birds, for instance, more commonly sing only in courtship and during the time they are mated. Thus also, according to these tables, human musicians, to be successful, need unusually active Mars thought-cells.

Furthermore, as the Aggressive thought-cells rule the muscles, these, when Mars is prominent, facilitate acquiring the muscular control and skill which is so essential either to instrumental or vocal performance.

To become a musician requires plodding perseverance; and this aptitude for hard work and long hours of monotonous practice is conferred by the Saturn thought-cells; which accounts for the prominence of Saturn in musicians' charts.

Time and tune and the sense of rhythm are conferred by the Moon thought-cells. They give a natural aptitude for carrying melody. The tables do not give full justice to the Moon; for in most of the charts in which it is prominent, that prominence is exceptionally outstanding.

The Neptune thought-cells enable the musician to dramatize his work; to give it feeling. The appeal to the finer and more intricate emotions is that of Neptune. It is the ruler of cultural music, and not only those who do symphony work, but most of those who love the symphony, have Neptune prominent in their charts. Jazz is the expression of the Moon and Mars thought-cells, with little influence either from Neptune or Venus. Among vocalists whose performances were not mechanical, but attractively dramatic, Adelini Patti, Marion Talley and Lillian Russell had Neptune in the seventh house, and Geraldine Farrar had it on the cusp of her first.

The thought-cells mapped by Venus give a good ear for harmony and tone, and its aspect to the Moon or Mercury lends grace and artistry to musical expression.

Conductors need more of the Mars creative energy, and more of the ability to influence others through the personal magnetism given by a prominent Uranus. The one chart out of the ten, of directors analyzed, which has neither Uranus nor Mars prominent, is that of Louise Antonio Birco, said to be the first woman in 70 years to lead the Philharmonic Orchestra of Berlin. Unmarried, affecting masculinity in dress and actions, she has attained high musical honors. Moon is on the M.C., and leadership is shown by Sun conjunction Ascendant. Sun, Neptune and Mercury are on the Ascendant in close conjunction.

For originality, such as composers should have, Uranus must be prominent in the birth-chart, and for fine feeling and fertility of imagination, a prominent Neptune is required. All the great composers of the 25 analyzed have both Uranus and Neptune prominent in their charts.

As a result of these analyses, should a chart be brought to me to judge if some boy or girl should take up music as a profession, I should first look to the prominence of the Moon and Neptune. If neither the Moon nor Neptune were prominent, I should discourage such a course.

If the Moon were prominent, especially if in an angle; or to a lesser degree if the Moon were not prominent but Neptune were prominent, I should consider the child had some natural flair for music. This flair, however, would not lead far unless there were also the creative energy mapped by a prominent birth-chart Mars, and the persistence to keep doggedly at practice conferred by a prominent birth-chart Saturn.

The Luck Factor

For the luck attracted in association with music, as it is largely used in entertainment, look chiefly to the fifth house, giving Venus, the general ruler of music and other arts also some consideration. Madame Schumann-Heink, for instance, has two planets in her fifth, one of them Jupiter, in sextile to the Sun.

Radio broadcasting is one of the several ninth house methods of reaching the public. Even as Neptune rules moving pictures, so Pluto rules the radio. Those who have a prominent Pluto in their birth-charts are more apt to take to radio work of some kind than are others. Thus for radio work, the aspects of Pluto have some significance in reference to the luck attracted. But of more importance in radio work, so far as the luck factor is concerned, is the power and harmony of the ninth house. The luck attracted in association with the movies may be determined from the harmony of the fifth house and the aspects of Neptune.

A tabulation of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were found gave no variation from normal sign distribution of sufficient importance to warrant mention; and certainly did not indicate any sign to be a birth-chart constant, or that those with some other sign prominent should be discouraged from taking up nursing.

derived in the past from experiences in taking care of the helpless and looking after their wants, such as commonly is involved in the parenthood of various forms of life, are chiefly mapped in the birth-chart by the Moon. To the extent there have been many and intense experiences of this kind in the evolutionary past, is there a natural aptitude for looking after those weak or ill. Thus must those with ability for such work have in their birth-charts a prominent Moon.

The actual work of rebuilding the body, as well as the work of building anything else, is an activity of the Aggressive thought-cells. For any creative work the thought-cells mapped by Mars must be unusually active. And as a nurse, in the sense of one who looks after those who are ill rather than one who merely looks after the comforts of children who may be quite healthy, is expected to look after the rebuilding of the human body, he must, to be successful, have thought-cells within his astral body such as are mapped by a prominent birth-chart Mars.

Other than the prominence of the professional planet, Jupiter, in the chart of doctors, there is another difference between their charts and those of nurses. Both the doctor and the nurse must have Mars prominent, not merely because the work required is constructive in nature, but also to give the ability to witness the pain of others, and to do things unflinchingly which cause others great suffering, if it contributes in the long run to the healing process. But in the charts of professional nurses the Moon is usually more prominent than Mars, standing out quite conspicuously, and giving them a desire to minister to other people's wants; while in the charts of doctors it is not even a birth-chart constant.

There are those who take up nursing merely because it affords an opportunity to make a living. But those most successful in such work have a deep desire to serve a useful purpose in the world, and take a very real pride in being able to relieve the suffering of others. This attitude derives largely from the thought-cells in the astral body mapped by the planet Pluto, and most nurses have this universal welfare planet prominent in their birth-charts. Through its rulership of Scorpio, Pluto also may have some affinity with the destructive and constructive attributes of Mars. At least, its thought-cells make for drastic action, and a good nurse cannot be a milk and water individual.

The Luck Factor

As nursing is a vocation ruled by the Moon, the thought-cells mapped by this planet have primary luck significance to those who follow it. Nurses commonly are under instructions from doctors, and often are dependent upon their recommendation for employment. The tendency to fortune or misfortune through doctors is indicated in the birth-chart by the aspects received by Mars.

If one does not have an active sixth house, one is not brought continuously into association with illness, and therefore one does not become a nurse. The extent one will have luck or misfortune through associating with those sick, is determined by the harmony or discord of the thought-cells mapped by the sixth house, which is shown by the aspects of the ruler of the sixth.

Even when nursing is not in association with a hospital, commonly hospital experience is required in the training; and even apart from such an institution, the sick room, as a place of confinement, bears relation to the twelfth house. The luck in such associations is determined from the aspects made to the ruler of the twelfth.

It seems advisable, therefore, for one who contemplates nursing as a vocation, to have at least one strong harmonious aspect to the ruler of the sixth house; and better also to have at least one harmonious aspect to the ruler of the twelfth.

Tabulating the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant showed Cancer, Leo, Virgo and Libra more numerous; with about an equal number in each. The fewest had these factors in Aquarius, next fewest in Pisces, with Gemini only a little more numerous than Pisces. Yet policemen are sufficiently numerous with Sun, Moon and Ascendant in Aquarius that no one should be discouraged from taking up this vocation because these factors are in that sign. Nor can any one sign be considered the birth-chart constant of the vocation to the extent that one should be encouraged to take it up on the strength of sign positions.

The work of a policeman is mostly routine in nature. This monotonous sameness, which most of the time is present, can be endured only by individuals who have the thought-cells mapped by Saturn unusually prominent. And even those whose work lends itself to greater variety, must have Saturn thought-cell persistence of purpose to follow the criminal unrelentingly until a capture is made.

Those who are too soft hearted are unfitted for police work. Saturn is the planet of strict and unbending justice, and the thought-cells he maps, to the extent they are dominant influences in the life, encourage the attitude that those who infringe upon the rights of others should pay a commensurate penalty. There is no flexibility to Saturn, no tengency to permit humanitarian feelings to deflect the individual from that which he has accepted as his duty. There is a rigid demand that the letter of the law be enforced, and a desire to haul the misdoer before the bar of justice.

Mars in most of these charts not only was prominent, but afflicted; more often than not by the Moon, than which no aspect gives more courage and daring. Police work would be a poor occupation for any person who is timid, or who makes a special effort to avoid danger. While much of the life is dully monotonous, there are intervals in which initiative, action and a willingness to enter into personal combat with desperate men are required. Those who do not have the Aggressive thought-cells in their astral bodies sufficiently active, an activity which is mapped by the prominence of birth-chart Mars, do not enjoy work in which the possibility of deadly strife is ever before them. Only a prominent birth-chart Mars denotes one who is sufficiently willing to face physical danger to become successful as a policeman.

The underworld in general and the criminal in particular, come under the rule of Pluto. It is a policeman's business to keep in touch with these anti-social individuals, that he may protect society from their depredations. Furthermore, he does not work against crime single-handed, but in cooperation with other officers; and this co-operative ability also is mapped in his birth-chart by the prominence of the planet Pluto.

Policemen, within the field wherein they operate, also are dictators. The traffic officer's gestures take precedence over mechanical signals; and officers in general are given authority by the group of society which they serve to enforce the law. This representing the group will, and the authority to use force in behalf of the group will is typical of Pluto; and the table indicates that those who succeed in police work have the thought-cells mapped by Pluto quite active.

But to apprehend criminals it is not sufficient alone to be daring. One must be able to scheme, and to lay traps for them. Neptune is the traditional trapper and fisherman. And it seems that those who do not have certain thought-cells in their astral bodies sufficiently active, as mapped by a prominent Neptune, are lacking in ability to catch their quarry in the proverbial net of the law. Apparently this Neptune prominence, as well as twelfth house activity, is especially important in the charts of those doing secret service work.

The Luck Factor

While the thought-cells mapped by Saturn must be prominent in the birth-charts of policemen, all law-enforcement officers, as well as soldiers, come chiefly under the rulership of Mars. And as Mars rules this vocation, its aspects have an important bearing upon the luck attracted while following it. This Mars luck factor relates chiefly to the tendency toward accident and strife while engaged in police work. That is, if Mars chiefly, and the other accident planets--Saturn and Uranus --strongly indicate a tendency toward accident, the individual in his police duties would be apt to become injured seriously in his attempts to enforce the law; particularly at those times in his life when there is a major progressed aspect to Mars within one degree of perfect. If the progressed aspect to Mars were inharmonious, the danger would be greater.

Criminals in general and those who, as most criminals now do, have gang affiliations, are ruled by Pluto. As a policeman's duties compel him to come in close contact with such individuals, both to prevent crime and to take criminals into custody, the Pluto luck factor also should be given some consideration. If Pluto were harmoniously aspected, he would tend to be lucky in such contacts; but if Pluto were too heavily afflicted by discordant aspects, he would attract misfortune through the activities of criminals. One of the most characteristic methods by which those of the Lower-Pluto type defeat the efforts of law-enforcement officers, is either to get some actual evidence of misconduct which can be held over the officer, or to manufacture such evidence in such a way that the officer dares not discharge his duty properly for fear of consequences to himself.

Criminals are the secret enemies of society, and, like the places where they are confined when apprehended, belong to the department of life mapped in the birth-chart by the twelfth house. One who expects to become a policeman, therefore, should have not merely thought-cells mapped by Saturn, Mars, Pluto and Neptune prominent, but he should have active twelfth house thought-cells, such as are indicated by its ruler being powerfully aspected. If he does not have such a birth-chart he should be discouraged from taking up law-enforcement as a vocation.

In much the same way that the planet Pluto maps by its aspects the luck to be expected from contact with criminals, so also is the ruler of the twelfth house similarly significant. If it is discordantly aspected, it brings difficulties when there are attempts at crime detection and contact with criminals. But if the ruler of the twelfth has at least one powerful harmonious aspect, there is opportunity for sufficient luck in that department of life that the individual need not be discouraged from becoming a policeman.

Most policemen have more discordant aspects to the ruler of the twelfth than harmonious ones, and most of them experience a commensurate amount of poor luck. Yet as only 6 out of the 100 analyzed had nothing but discordant aspects to the ruler of the twelfth, unless there is at least one harmonious aspect to this twelfth house ruler, the obstacles to be overcome in making a success of police work are so great that it seems wiser for the individual to direct his energies into some other channel.

We also tabulated the activity of the seventh house, but in these 100 politicians' charts, it showed no activity above or below normal. The signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were located in these 100 charts were tabulated; but none was found sufficiently important or unimportant to warrant special mention; and certainly none can be considered as a birth-chart constant of politicians.

The drive for significance is the most ancient and deep seated of all the motives of life. Without the thought-cells mapped by the Sun, which have been built in the past through experiences with significance, sufficiently active and harmonious, there is no incentive to carry on, and the organism lacks vitality and recuperative power. These Power thought-cells also are the chief source of an individual's ability to win the obedience of others.

The ability to exercise authority is dependent upon the intensity and volume of the activity of these thought-cells mapped in the birth-chart by the Sun. This is true not merely in politics, which because it implies leadership and the exercise of authority is ruled by the Sun; but in all walks of life. The shop foreman or the department store floor-walker, to the extent others take orders from him and are obedient to his requests, must have active thought-cells such as are mapped in his birth-chart by a prominent Sun.

The vocation of a politician is that of directing the activities of other men. Whether he gains a position of authority through election or appointment, or exercises his power without general public consent as a precinct boss, he must have the sense of leadership and the power to dominate others which alone unusually active Sun thought-cells can give.

Pluto is the general ruler of dictators, and the dictator type of politician needs active Pluto thought-cells. But even if not given to dictating, anyone who handles groups of people needs these thought-cells active; and ability to handle people in groups, or in large masses, is highly advantageous to anyone who aspires to political honors.

Even more important probably, and next in importance to the sense of significance conferred by the Sun and its power to impress others, the politician, to be successful, should have the high voltage magnetism by which, either in personal contact, or through oratory, he can sway the minds of others. Active Sun thought-cells give a volume and persistence in the generation of electrical energies which enables the individual to exercise considerable control over himself and over others. The personal magnetism thus developed gives others a feeling of reliability and solid strength.

But the electric energies generated by the activity of the Uranus thought-cells, while unstable and erratic, have a much higher voltage. And if these thought-cells are unusually active, as mapped by a prominent birth-chart Uranus, the personal magnetism is powerful enough quite to overcome the electricity generated by the nervous system of others, and exercise a dominating force. These shorter wave-length radiations of Uranus sweep others off their feet and cause them to sponsor political programs, and become wildly enthusiastic over ideas, which if submitted to calm saturnine reason, they would be quick to reject. To be able to enthuse others and influence their minds, the politician must have the thought-cells active which are mapped by the planet Uranus.

A politician needs to be shrewd. Always there are others who strive to take his position from him, or who, for their own selfish purposes are willing to cast discredit upon him. A slow witted person, or one unable quickly to adjust himself to new situations, is easily defeated by his rivals. Furthermore, one who purposes to lead others, and to exercise authority, should be a person of ideas. Thus he should have active Intellectual thought-cells, such as are mapped in his birth-chart by a prominent Mercury.

All have encountered the hand-shaking type of politician, the person who tries never to forget a name (a Mercury prominent accomplishment), and who greets each individual he meets as a cherished friend. This type usually goes to great pains, also, to do favors for people. And because he is so well liked, rather than because he is competent, people vote for him, or those he has granted favors bring pressure to bear in the right places to insure an appointment.

This good will factor, and the joviality and fellowship which result either in patronage or votes, is an expression of the Religious thought-cells. To the extent these thought-cells are active, does an individual have ability of this kind. And the more prominent Jupiter is in his birth-chart, the more active are these good will thought-cells thus mapped.

Politics is essentially a tenth house association in two different ways. The tenth house maps the thought-cells which relate to public office and to the administration of any business, private or public. Therefore, if one is to be consistently and closely associated with the administration of the business of the people, one must have tenth house thought-cells active enough to attract such association. But in addition to this, political preferment, even when the exercise of political power is not known to the public at large, largely depends upon reputation, which in turn relates to the thought-cells mapped by the tenth house. Even the grafting ward heeler, if he is to retain power among those who's voting he directs, must retain the faith of his lieutenants that they will be rewarded as he promises. Whatever his reputation may be where the outside public is concerned, he must retain the reputation of always rewarding those who work for his interests with commensurate favors. Thus is it essential for one who takes up politics as a vocation to have an active tenth house.

The Luck Factor

In politics there are ways of utilizing various luck factors. Inharmonious aspects to the Sun indicate Power thought-cells that will attract difficulties in the exercise of authority. It is fortunate, but not essential to political success, to have the Sun receiving at least one strong harmonious aspect. Such an aspect tends to attract favors from those in authority, as well as helping in the harmonious administration of it.

As political power is so dependent upon reputation, which is mapped by the tenth house, it is a good luck indicator in this vocation to have a well aspected M.C. or a well aspected ruler of the tenth house. Yet our table shows that while all politicians had active tenth house thought-cells, that 54% of them had aspects to the ruler of the tenth more discordant than harmonious; although only 5% had nothing but discordant aspects to the ruler of this house of reputation.

When the birth-chart constants of the vocation are present, some politicians, in spite of Sun and tenth house afflictions, are able to go a long way through utilizing the luck factor of an active and harmonious house of friends (eleventh). They cultivate friendship on every hand, and whenever possible avoid making enemies, and depend upon these friends to bring sufficient pressure to bear to give them the desired office in spite of reputation and difficulty in exercising authority.

There have been those who have used the luck factor of a harmonious second house, through contributing to political campaigns and charitable and public enterprises, to assist them politically. Yet when the tenth house is too greatly afflicted, and with no harmonious aspect to the M.C. or the ruler of the tenth, it seems wiser not to aspire to a position obtained through popular election; although a well aspected Moon is a luck factor of much value in winning such a popular contest. Instead, the politician should seek an appointment office, or push someone else to the front, on whom he can depend to carry out the sound policies he originates.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to sign occupied by Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Libra highest, with Virgo, Taurus and Gemini next highest. Sagittarius was lowest with two fifths as many as Libra, and Aries next to lowest with only one more than Sagittarius. Thus there would be no basis for either encouraging or discouraging any person from becoming a radio technician merely because of the sign Sun, Moon, Ascendant or planets were in.

Electromagnetic waves not only are used to transmit radio programs, but in some of their types are the Boundary-Line energy between the physical world and the astral world. In space they have the velocity of light; 186,284 miles per second. At this velocity properties develop which are inconsistent with anything that can be called physical. Yet they are properties too which are inconsistent with the inner-plane or astral world. When velocities exceed that of light, distance, gravitation and time as we know them no longer obtain. But these electromagnetic velocities are in between those of the physical world and those of the inner-plane, and make contact with both. Thus is it that energies of the physical world can only influence the inner-plane world, and the inner-plane world can only contact and influence the physical world, through electromagnetic energies. And while the electromagnetic energies commonly used for this purpose are generated in organic life processes, those which the radio technician uses are similar enough in many of their characteristics that we can learn much relative to the manner in which the two planes of life interact through a study of them. The Boundary-Line energies when they have frequencies that make contact with the inner-plane possible, and the electromagnetic waves which are used in radio, are ruled by Pluto. And as the radio technician must associate with, and understand electromagnetic waves, it is necessary for him to have the thought-cells in his astral body ruled by Pluto active.

These waves, both in the human body and in a radio transmission set, are electrically generated. As Uranus rules electricity, only those with active Uranus thought-cells are strongly enough attracted into association with electrical devices, and have aptitude enough for handling electricity, to become successful radio technicians. There is call also upon active Uranus thought-cells to give the ingenuity and inventive ability for making and handling the various intricate parts involved in radio work.

Where the function of the Uranus thought-cells leaves off and that of the Pluto thought-cells begins, either in radio work or in Intellectual extra-sensory perception, can best be made clear by considering that Uranus rules electricity, and Pluto rules such energy as is radiated by the field that always is present when electricity moves from one point to another. At low frequencies both electricity and its field are dominated almost exclusively by Uranus. The radiation of power into space from an alternating current, for instance, increases as the square of its frequency. The radiation of electromagnetic waves from the ordinary power line, while carrying an alternating current at 60 cycles per second, is negligible due to low frequency. Yet the magnetic field extending some distance from such power lines can be used, through induction, to furnish power. Such a current and its field are almost entirely within the province of Uranus. They have close contact with the low velocity region of the physical world. But what happens when the frequency of the alternating current is stepped up? A kilocycle is 1,000 cycles per second.

In the 60 cycle power line nearly all of the field folds back to be reabsorbed in the conductor. But when the oscillations are many kilocycles, the field does not thus fold back, but continues on into space as the type of waves used in radio. These energies which are thus radiated no longer are under the dominion of Uranus. They acquire properties that make them more akin to the inner-plane than the outer. They pass through the walls of buildings, and reflected from the stratosphere tend to follow round the surface of the earth. Scientists have not decided just what they are, and refer to them as properties of fields in space, or in other vague terms. They are ruled not by Uranus, but by Pluto.

A radio technician, in addition to understanding electricity and how radio waves act, is called upon to build and repair radio apparatus. He thus must have the constructive urge and the mechanical ability which alone are present when there are active Mars thought-cells.

The radio technician also must be alert and intelligent. For these qualities we look chiefly to the Mercury thought-cells. However, a significant percentage of the charts analyzed had Mercury only moderately prominent and the Moon outstanding. It seems that these, instead of depending upon cerebral activity of the Mercury type, were able to make up for it through the use of the faculties of the unconscious mind. That is, with Uranus and Pluto prominent as well as the Moon, they used, probably without knowing it, extra-sensory perception to gain information about the things which it became necessary for them to know. The Moon rules the mentality, and its prominence gives a type of mental activity, even though less devoted to grinding study and cerebral activity than is denoted by a prominent Mercury.

Making and repairing radio sets is not ninth house work. All broadcasting, however, comes under the ninth house. And as the instruments constructed are related either to broadcasting or the reception of that which has been broadcast, there is at least an indirect association with the ninth house. The technician works with apparatus which makes it possible for ninth house activities to take place. Therefore it is well for the radio technician to have an active ninth house.

The Luck Factor

As radio is ruled by Pluto, the aspects which Pluto receives in the birth-chart are the most important factor to consider in determining how lucky an individual will be in radio work. If he is to be also associated with broadcasting in any way, the ninth house, which rules broadcasting, should not be merely active, but its ruler should receive at least one strong harmonious aspect or several weak harmonious aspects.

In broadcasting there is some field for choice of associations. If the efforts are chiefly devoted to broadcasting news, Mercury and the third house should have some harmony. But if the work is chiefly in association with entertainment, the aspects of the ruler of the fifth house become significant. Most radio work at the present day is sponsored by advertisers. The advertiser is ruled by the seventh house, the ruler of which will indicate by its aspects to what extent he will be inclined to be reasonable or even favorable. But the luck in advertising must be determined from the aspects of the ruler of the ninth house.

Salesman

In the analysis of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were found in these charts of 100 salesmen, it was found that Leo and Virgo were highest, Aries fewest, with Pisces and Taurus making a poor showing. Yet Aries produced more than one third as many, and Taurus more than one half as many, as the two high signs. Analyzing by Sun sign only, Leo ranked first, with Gemini next. Aries by Sun sign alone produced the fewest, with about one third as many. Yet while Leo seems to be favorable to salesmen, it cannot be considered a birth-chart constant of that vocation. And enough successful salesmen are born under strong influences from all the other signs, and without the more favored signs prominent, that it seems inadvisable to discourage any person from taking up salesmanship merely on the ground that he has Sun, Moon, Ascendant or planets in certain zodiacal signs.

The table, as well as common observation, indicates that there are two distinct types of salesmen. There is the individual who depends upon the good will of his customer to make his sale, and there is the individual who depends upon persuasive powers. Most successful salesmen are to an extent a combination of both types.

The good will type is one who through various acts of friendship, through joviality and perhaps the ability to tell entertaining stories, builds up the impression he is a fine fellow. People patronize him even when they must pay a little more, or go to considerable extra trouble to do so, because they like him so well. On his part, he takes real pleasure in doing favors for people, and will go to no end of trouble to be helpful. In the professions, where the ethics do not permit the individual to advertise as merchants do, nor to boast unduly of his achievements, the individual must depend almost entirely upon his record of past achievement and this good will salesmanship of the friendship, hand-shaking sort, to draw to him patronage and thus sell his abilities. Merchants, however, also find it a great asset. Only those in whose astral bodies the so-called Religious thought-cells are unusually active, such as are mapped by a prominent birth-chart Jupiter, have this type of salesmanship ability.

Glibness of tongue, and a sharp intellect are not to be despised by one who would become a salesman. Ability to express one's self clearly, and to make one's point, have their advantage. But probably cleverness of talk has been over rated as an asset in selling. Such ability is only present in the birth-charts of those who have the Mercury thought-cells unusually active. Yet in only 85% of the salesmen's charts analyzed is Mercury prominent.

The ability to exercise, even though unconsciously, magnetic control over others, however, is very important in salesmanship. High pressure salesmanship of all kinds depends chiefly upon the use of a magnetic personality to beat down sales resistance, and to implant in the prospective customer's mind images of the advantages to be gained through buying, in so forceful a manner that the customer is powerless, temporarily, to resist them.

It is only those having the thought-cells in their unconscious minds mapped by the planet Uranus unusually active, who develop within their nervous systems an electrical voltage sufficiently high to be able thus by personal magnetism to sway the minds of others and get them to do their bidding. Such a prominent birth-chart Uranus commonly also gives ability to discern quickly just how the prospect is reacting to the suggestions given him, and to adapt new suggestions based upon these observations. We are warranted, therefore, both from the table and from personal observation of the methods used by salesmen whose charts we have, in concluding that the person, who hopes to use the persuasive type of salesmanship successfully, must have a prominent birth-chart Uranus.

Furthermore, the table of analysis reveals that unless either Jupiter or Uranus is prominent in the birth-chart, it is better to discourage such an individual from engaging in salesmanship as his vocation. Those most successful in such work have both Jupiter and Uranus conspicuously prominent in their charts of birth.

The Luck Factor

Salesmanship as a vocation is chiefly under the rule of the financial planet Jupiter. Therefore, the aspects received by Jupiter in the birth-chart have considerable significance in reference to the luck attracted while following this work. However, if Jupiter and Uranus are quite prominent in the birth-chart, too much importance should not be placed upon a badly afflicted Jupiter, as usually it is possible to select something to sell which, because the planet ruling it is well aspected in the birth-chart,

How to Select A Vocation

will through association attract considerable good luck.

Thus if the Moon were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling things the common people need, such as groceries, beverages, and such commodities as can be had at a low price, and selling them in volume to the common people. The five-and-ten stores and their somewhat higher priced offspring are typical environments for Moon salesmanship. Selling to these stores what they retail to the common people is also largely a Moon association in so far as the things sold are concerned, although not in the sense that the merchant to whom the sale was made is under Moon rulership.

If Mercury were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck in selling transportation, newspapers, books, study courses, and methods for improving the mind.

If Venus were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling jewelry, finery, artistic things, and the articles worn by women. Clothing in general comes under the rulership of Venus; but the less attractive, more serviceable wearing apparels, such as ready-made wear for men, probably has less of the Venus vibration.

If the Sun were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling directly to politicians, foremen and executives; selling bonds and gilt edge securities, for instance. The closer the association with those in positions of authority the better.

If Mars were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling firearms, ammunition, tools and machinery.

If Jupiter were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling the more expensive things which people of wealth alone can buy, or in selling to merchants for purposes of resale.

If Saturn were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling real estate, coal, lumber, hay, grain, furniture or insurance. Sales managers must have a prominent birth-chart Saturn.

If Uranus were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling automobiles, electrical equipment of all kinds, astrological services, or lately invented ingenious gadgets.

If Neptune were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring luck through promoting some enterprise or selling stock, airplanes or air transportation, air conditioning, moving pictures or other entertainment.

If Pluto were well aspected in the birth-chart, the harmonious activity of the thought-cells thus mapped would tend to bring good luck through selling cooperative activities or products, through selling radio or radio equipment, and when they are developed enough to sell to the public, selling television, and power transmitted by wireless.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Cancer highest, then Leo, with Virgo a close third. Taurus was lowest and Pisces next lowest, these two signs showing only about half as many as the mentioned high signs. Nevertheless, if the planetary birth-chart constants are shown, there is no valid reason to discourage a person with strong Taurus, or strong Pisces influences from becoming a stenographer.

In all work requiring mental alertness and quick adaptability, as well as in such as is ordinarily considered to be brain work, there should be thought-cells in the astral body of the type mapped by a prominent Mercury. And probably Mercury is prominent in more people's charts than any other planet.

Due to the fact that it is never over 28'degrees along the zodiac from the Sun, and that it revolves around the Sun in a comparatively short period, it is within orb of a conjunction with the Sun frequently. And as both Sun and Mercury move along the zodiac at rather a rapid pace, they make more aspects to the heavier planets than do the more slowly moving orbs. Thus there is opportunity at frequent intervals for people to be born with Mercury fairly prominent in their birth-charts. Not prominent enough to make writers, but prominent enough that if the other constants are present they can become teachers, actors, bookkeepers, waiters, telephone operators or stenographers.

Many stenographers also are competent bookkeepers, and therefore have in their charts the constants of both vocations. Those following both occupations must have Mercury thought-cells active. But those who engage in bookkeeping must have Mars thought-cells active to give them facility with figures, and Saturn thought-cells active to give them plodding care that every little detail is just right. The typical stenographer, who has no bookkeeping inclinations, does not have the patience which monotonous Saturn confers. Instead, he is on his toes with alertness, restless, and whenever possible short-cuts in doing his work.

Not quickness in making calculations, as signified by Mars-Mercury, marks the natural stenographer, but quickness in writing down thought, in grasping the ideas of others, and in making time-saving short-cuts in placing the thoughts of others on paper; ability indicated by active Uranus-Mercury thought-cells.

That which comes into the life through the influence of Uranus nearly always is in some manner due to a human agency. And stenography is work in which there is close contact with some other individual; while a bookkeeper may do most of his work without conversation or close association with another.

Uranus also is the planet of short-cuts. The ability to handle short-hand with facility is typical of Mercury-Uranus thought-cells, as much so as to handle mechanical gadgets is typical activity of the Mars-Uranus thought-cells.

Probably the most favorable single aspect for ability as a stenographer is an aspect between Mercury and Uranus. It will be noticed that 68% of the charts analyzed have this aspect present. Next most favorable seems to be an aspect between Uranus and the Moon, with an aspect between Uranus and the Sun coming third. I believe we are warranted in discouraging anyone from taking up stenography as a vocation in whose chart Uranus, the short-cut planet, is not prominent.

Stenography, quite as much as bookkeeping, requires active third house thought-cells. People who do not have the ruler of the third powerfully aspected, or at least planets in the third, write comparatively little. And a person in whose life little writing is shown is by that indication barred from success as a stenographer.

The Luck Factor

Stenographic work is typically a Mercury occupation; and it is strictly a third house activity. In reference to the luck factors I believe the order of importance is the reverse of that for bookkeepers. While bookkeepers must possess agility in making calculations, it is not the same kind of alertness which is required to take down dictation. A bookkeeper need not consider the time factor in the same way a stenographer does. If he reaches a point where it seems desirable, he can use whatever time is necessary to enable him to handle the matter before him carefully and painstakingly. But a stenographer taking dictation must write down what is said as fast as it is uttered, and is not expected to call upon the one giving dictation often to repeat what was said in the effort to get it down correctly. The speech of the one dictating, and the writing down of what was said by the stenographer, as well as transcribing it, are all typical of Mercury, although the transcribing also is quite as much a third house activity as bookkeeping. I believe, however, that the importance of taking down speech as it is uttered makes Mercury a bit more important in considering the luck factor in the charts of stenographers than the third house.

Yet it is better if the ruler of the third house is well aspected. This would indicate that the individual in association with all manner of third house affairs, including stenographic work, would get so-called lucky breaks. On the other hand, if there were no good aspects to the ruler of the third, and powerfully discordant ones were present, the stenographer, in following an occupation for which there might be unusual talent, would attract many so-called unlucky breaks.

Yet we must not jump to the conclusion that just because there are heavily afflicted planets in the third, or the ruler of the third, or Mercury, is heavily afflicted that the individual should be discouraged from taking up stenography. Even discordant aspects indicate natural aptitude, and unless there is no help from harmonious aspects, such natural aptitude may be ample to overcome the so-called unlucky breaks encountered. Most stenographers' charts have both discordant and harmonious aspects to Mercury, and both discordant and harmonious aspects to the ruler of the third house.

Uranus represents largely a human influence. Afflictions to Uranus thus commonly indicate misfortunes brought about through contact with others. And if Mercury, chief ruler of stenography, is afflicted by Uranus, the association with stenography as a vocation tends to attract the individual to a human association where the affliction can work out. One may also say that a discordant aspect between Uranus and the Sun tends to cause affliction through the boss or one in authority, and that a discordant aspect between Uranus and the Moon tends to cause affliction through the influence of women or common people. A harmonious aspect between Mercury, the ruler of stenography, and Uranus, not only gives ability, but is a decided luck attracting aspect for those following this vocation.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave Libra highest, then Leo, with Pisces third.

Taurus and Cancer were lowest with a little more than two-thirds the number to be found in Libra. Next lowest were Aries, Gemini, Virgo and Aquarius; each of these containing the same number.

The more common motive which prompts an individual to go into business is the desire for economic safety. People who fear a time may arrive when they will be in want for food, clothing and shelter, or when they will be in want for less essential material things which they desire to possess, are impelled to strive to prevent such an occurrence. And one of the most common ways of preventing such want and the suffering it brings is to trade with others who have what is desired, or with others who have the medium of exchange that will enable that which is desired to be purchased. The bargainer, the shrewd trader, the individual who takes to business because he likes it, has the thought-cells mapped by a prominent Saturn in his birth-chart. And while store clerks need not be good bargainers, to feel at home in the atmosphere of trade, and to follow day after day, the required routine, they should have a prominent Saturn in their charts of birth.

Jupiter is the salesmanship planet. He thrives not on bargains, but on the good will of others. To the extent Jupiter is a dominant influence in the life will people go out of their way to do the individual favors. And to be a successful store clerk the individual should thus be able, in some measure, to attract patronage. People will walk blocks farther, and right past a store where they can buy to greater advantage where a typically Saturn individual is behind the counter, in order to make purchases of a clerk whose Jupiter is prominent enough to give him genial warmth and an atmosphere of joviality. To be sure, a store clerk need not have the salesmanship ability that is requisite in some lines. It is not even necessary that he have the high-pressure magnetism conferred by a prominent Uranus. But he should have some measure of the salesmanship qualities which are denoted in a birth-chart only when Jupiter is prominent in it.

A store clerk need not be a student, need not have wide information; but he should be able to talk with some measure of intelligence to his customers. Customers like to have some interest shown in their affairs and problems. There are certain bits of information which they are pleased to receive. And the clerk should be able to explain the points of the goods he endeavors to sell. Also there is the matter of making out a bill for whatever goods are sold, and keeping the record of sales straight; all of which makes certain demands upon the Mercury type of intelligence. It is an advantage therefore, for a store clerk to have Mercury prominent in his chart of birth.

The people in general, as distinct from any particular class, are ruled by the Moon. If an individual is to attract into his life constant contacts with large numbers of people he should thus have the Moon prominent in his chart of birth. Not only are the common people, which most store clerks daily contact, ruled by the Moon, but this luminary also rules women; and in America, at least, women do the majority of the store buying. A prominent Moon in the birth-chart makes it that much easier for women to take an important place in the life. Whether they will affect it harmoniously or discordantly, of course, must be determined by its aspects.

But it was found in the analysis of 100 charts that Pluto was prominent even more often than Jupiter, Mercury or the Moon. Pluto has to do with mobs of people and with people in groups, and it relates to cooperative ability. There are stores, no doubt, where people come only singly or in pairs; but in most stores there are special occasions, such as sales, when groups of people must be handled; and a prominent Pluto seems to aid in this. Likewise there are stores where a clerk is quite independent of others. But usually a clerk, to be successful in his vocation, must possess the ability to co-operate with the boss at least, and more often than not with a number of other clerks. For an organization to function effectively, whether it is in a store or a political movement, there must be an attitude of all working for a single objective. A certain amount of loyalty to the organization is demanded, and the ability to overlook friction and personal bias in a co-operative effort to further the interests of all. Such ability is conferred by active thought-cells such as are mapped by Pluto.

The success of a store clerk depends upon the impression he creates with the public he is compelled to contact daily. This impression is indicated not merely by Saturn and Jupiter, but also by his own personality, indicated by the first house, and by the personalities of the public he attracts, indicated by the seventh house. He needs active first house thought-cells to give him personality and personal activity, and he needs active seventh house thought-cells to attract to him, for good or ill, the public. People who do not have active seventh house thought-cells do not have constant contacts with the public.

The Luck Factor

Of first importance in reference to the luck factor are the aspects received by the planet, or planets, ruling the seventh house. If the seventh house is shown to be quite discordant, constant difficulties will arise in dealing with the public; but if the seventh house is active, and its ruler well aspected, there will be important contacts with the public, and they will prove harmonious and of advantage. However, many store clerks succeed in holding their jobs in spite of considerable difficulty with customers.

Clerking in a store is ruled chiefly by Saturn. Usually, however, there are rulers relating to what is handled which are even more important to consider from the luck standpoint. A hardware clerk thus has more association with Mars, a clothing clerk with Venus, a radio clerk with Pluto, and an electrical appliance clerk with Uranus. Thus, after considering the seventh house, the Tuck factor should be considered from the type of merchandise which chiefly is sold.

An analysis of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant of each of these 100 charts is found does not indicate that any of the signs can be considered birth-chart constants of teaching. The Sun, Moon or Ascendant in Gemini, Virgo or Sagittarius, however, seems to attract to teaching as a profession more often than other signs do. Also, every additional aspect to Mercury seems to give aid in this direction.

Mercury is the planet mapping the thought-cells within the unconscious mind which have most direct association with the electrical currents which flow over the nerves, and which are responsible for objective thinking. Thinking in terms of words and sentences is a type of conscious activity dependent upon the use of the electromagnetic energies ruled by Mercury; to convey that which the unconscious mind desires to express, to the physical cells of the brain. That is, the activity of the brain cells is dependent upon the activity of the thought-cells which Mercury maps in the birth-chart. Thus it is common to speak of Mercury as the planet of mental expression.

Those who express themselves through writing or speech, to be successful, must have the Intellectual thought-cells more than commonly active; which means that Mercury must be prominent in the birth-chart. And the study of the charts of 100 teachers reveals that to the extent Mercury is thus prominent and strongly aspected is there ability to impart information to others. Each aspect of Mercury, connecting it by a stellar aerial with another distinct group of thought-cells, gives ability to impart information of a different kind. Thus the more numerous the aspects which Mercury makes, the greater is the facility to grasp and teach a variety of subjects.

Uranus, also closely associated with the nerve currents, gives a similar ability in imparting information. But because it so strongly is attracted to things new or uncommon, its prominence is not noticeable among teachers in the public schools. Among those who teach astrology and occultism it is nearly always prominent.

Those who teach, advertise, publish, lecture, or otherwise give public expression to their opinions, also are exercising the thought-cells mapped in their astral bodies by the ninth house. Any planet in the ninth house, and to a less pronounced degree, the ruler of the cusp of the ninth house, influences somewhat the manner in which the opinions are thus publicly expressed.

The Luck Factor

The luck factor in the vocation of teaching is to some extent indicated by the aspects made by the planet Mercury, which is general ruler of this profession. And it is also signified by the aspects made to the ruler of the ninth house.

In teaching, as in writing, it often is possible to select the subject taught. If the planet Mars were afflicted by Mercury and the ruler of the ninth house, strife and difficulties would be attracted in the attempt to teach mathematics or mechanical training. But if at the same time, either Mercury or the ruler of the ninth were in good aspect to Uranus, much luck might be expected from teaching astrology or electrical engineering.

Or if Mercury has any aspect to a planet, and that planet is otherwise well aspected, much luck could be expected from teaching a subject ruled by the planet. That is, if the person has ability to teach a subject, which usually requires that Mercury makes some aspect to the planet ruling it, the more harmonious in the chart the planet is which rules the subject the more luck would be attracted in teaching it, or otherwise associating with it.

Of those who are teachers of children, and of those who are teachers of music, the analysis shows that they almost invariably have an unusually active fifth house. The luck in thus associating with children or music, of course, is indicated by the aspects made to the ruler of the fifth.

Among those who are teachers of astrology, occultism or metaphysics, the power of the aspects to the ruler of the fifth was not noticeable. In such teaching and in lecture work in general, the thought-cells mapped by the ninth house must be active to give the type of energy which draws the person into thus expressing himself publicly. But the public thus addressed is chiefly represented by the seventh house. Therefore to discern the reaction of the public thus addressed, and the luck factor in relation to it, the aspects of the ruler of the seventh house should be considered.

In teaching, as in most work where the hazard is not outstanding, it is probable that ability, as indicated by a prominent Mercury and an active ninth house, is able to overcome a large amount of birth-chart discord. Even with one harmonious aspect to Mercury or to the ruler of the ninth, it would not be advisable to discourage an individual from taking up teaching, provided the thought-cells mapped by Mercury and the ninth house were active enough.

On the other hand, no matter if such aspects as Mercury and the ruler of the ninth house had were all harmonious; unless Mercury were prominent, and the ruler of the ninth was powerfully aspected, it would be well to discourage teaching as a vocation.

A tabulation of the 100 charts according to the signs occupied by the Sun, Moon and Ascendant gave some variation according to signs, but nothing outstanding enough to be considered a birth-chart constant, or markedly to encourage or discourage taking up telephone work.

Whatever the occupation may be, if it requires alertness and quick responsiveness, to be successful in it necessitates that Mercury be prominent in the birth-chart.

The prominence of Uranus in the charts of telephone operators probably has little connection with the magnetic power to influence the minds of others given by this planet. Instead, it is likely it relates to the association with something electrical, such as Uranus rules, and with the various gadgets which are an essential part of a telephone system.

Pluto, on the other hand, rules groups of people, such as a telephone operator serves. It is noticeable that those who contact groups of people, either working with them, or serving them, have this upper-octave of the Moon prominent in their charts of birth.

The significance of the Moon is quite obvious, although it is less often prominent than Mercury, Uranus or Pluto. The Moon rules the common people. And it is the common people, as a rule, who keep a telephone operator busy. It is true that there are calls from all classes, but even so, the Moon must be taken as the general ruler of the people; and much of the conversation which is carried on over a telephone is distinctly of the Moon type, gossipy and commonplace, about domestic affairs and trifles, rather than on the intellectual or informative plane of Mercury.

The Luck Factor

The associations of a telephone operator in her work are chiefly the electrical appliances ruled by Uranus, and the calls that are ruled by the third house. Every harmonious aspect Uranus receives, therefore, assists in attracting luck through contacts made with the switchboard, and through the electrical system which is essential to her work.

But probably of still more importance as influencing the luck factor is the third house. The third house rules the calls that are made, and the conversation which takes place by means of the telephone system. And as it is the avenue through which the operator is brought into contact with those she serves, and often the only avenue of contact between herself and those placing calls, to a great extent it determines whether or not her services are satisfactory, and the general attitude toward her of those she contacts over the wire. And as contacts over the telephone, or in association with it, sometimes lead to acquaintanceships of a more personal nature, which may benefit or injure socially or financially, this third house influence may lead to conditions that or mar the life.

This does not signify that a person should refuse to take up telephone work merely because Uranus or the third house is badly afflicted, as the analysis shows that 61% of such operators have an afflicted third house. But it does mean that at least one strong harmonious aspect to Uranus or the ruler of the third house is an advantage, and that the more harmonious the third house and Uranus are, if they are quite powerful, the more luck will be attracted in this vocation.

An analysis of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant of these 100 charts are found does not indicate any of the signs can be considered birth-chart constants of waiters. Sun, Moon or Ascendant in Gemini, Leo or Sagittarius seems to attract the individual to this calling more often than the other signs do, however, and Aquarius, Taurus or Aries least often. The three high signs mentioned contain about twice as many waiters as the three mentioned low signs.

The prominence of Mars in the chart of a waiter seems to be necessary to give the muscular strength for the amount of walking required, and to carry trays of food.

The Moon is the planet of the people to be served, and relates to nutrition and to the foods and beverages with which a waiter is constantly associated in his work. It seems that when the thought-cells it maps in the unconscious mind are unusually active, this facilitates work in which foods are handled.

The social urges ruled by Venus seem to express on a higher plane through the thought-cells ruled by Neptune. These social urges express as friendliness. But the kind of friendliness best suited to a waiter is not of the Venus kind, but one which is entirely related to his art of serving. That is, while Venus is distinctly personal, Neptune is able to attain the broader impersonal, yet courteous and friendly attitude which a good waiter displays. Neptune is natural ruler of the house of restrictions (twelfth), and while a waiter should be friendly, in that friendly spirit of accommodation he is not supposed to overstep very rigid restrictions. He is supposed to enter into conversation only when asked some question, and at other times to be as unobtrusive as possible.

The prominence of Pluto in a waiter's chart is readily understood when it is recalled that Pluto attracts to groups, and more often than not a waiter does not serve a single individual at a time, but a party of individuals. Most people when they dine, like to dine in the company of others. And it is customary to serve the whole party the same course of the meal at one time.

As Pluto and the Moon seem to be octaves of each other, it should be noted also that when one of these orbs is not prominent in the chart of a waiter the other one is.

Mercury is the natural ruler of the house of foods (sixth), but probably of greater importance in giving natural ability as a waiter is its influence over manual dexterity, alertness and a good temporary memory. Waiters often are required to juggle dishes and trays in a manner quite disconcerting to the sluggish. And often they are required to remember a long list of items, or special requirements, of their customers. Active Mercury thought-cells give facility in these matters.

While the sixth house maps the thought-cells relating to the conditions surrounding all kinds of work; those constantly at the beck and call of others, as are waiters, seem to require that these thought-cells be unusually energetic. To be energetic, it is not necessary that they be mapped by a planet in the sixth house. But the ruler of the sixth must receive powerful aspects.

Success as a waiter depends not merely upon muscular strength, agility and ability to remember the customer's wants, but also in rather marked degree upon an attractive and affable personality. Perhaps the continuous moving about which is part of a waiter's work in some degree makes it necessary that the first house thought-cells should be active, as mapped by the ruler of the first receiving powerful aspects. But in addition to this, the analysis of the 100 charts reveals that a great majority of them have a first house which denotes a pleasing personality. It seems, therefore, that a first house indicating both activity and affability are assets to those following this vocation.

The Luck Factor

As the occupation is so closely associated both with all types of people and with nutrition, the Moon, which rules both, is a luck factor to be considered. That is, one who has thought-cells which are mapped by a well aspected Moon tends to attract good fortune in association with crowds of people and with dining.

And as the occupation relates to the sixth house, the house both of foods and of serving, the aspects to the ruler of the sixth should be taken into consideration in determining the luck, or absence of it, while engaged in this type of work.

It is not essential that the ruler of the first house be entirely harmonious. The more harmonious aspects the ruler of the first has, and the fewer discordant ones, the less friction is apt to arise with those served. But it seems better to have a powerful, even though quite heavily afflicted first house, than to have one weak but free from discords.

While an afflicted Moon, an afflicted first house and an afflicted sixth house, are no bars to a moderate amount of success as a waiter, it will be far easier to create a demand for such service if the Moon, the ruler of the first house, and the ruler of the sixth house, each receives at least one moderately powerful harmonious aspect, such as a sextile or a trine. And the more powerful these planets are, and the more harmonious the aspects they receive, the more luck can be expected while following the vocation of waiter.

A tabulation of the signs in which the Sun, Moon and Ascendant were located in the charts of these 100 writers revealed no sign which stood out with sufficient prominence to warrant special mention, and certainly no sign can be considered a birth-chart constant of writers.

The thought-cells mapped by Mercury are those which give facility in expressing the thoughts through written or spoken language. With certain notable exceptions, the extent of their activity is a measure of the ability to write. Sometimes an unusually prominent Uranus, as in the charts of Charles Dickens and Herbert Spencer; or an unusually prominent Moon, in the case of those who write largely through impressions they get psychically; acts successfully as a substitute for a prominent Mercury. The five charts tabulated, in which Mercury was not prominent, were those of writers of outstanding recognition.

First of all, however, one who aspires to write should have exceptional knowledge of some kind. Many people know much about some special subject, but because the Mercury thought-cells are not active enough, they cannot impart that knowledge to others in writing. Thus the prominence of the writer commonly is measured, not by the prominence of Mercury, but by the power and ability shown in the chart as a whole; Mercury merely indicating ability successfully to express what is known in print.

I believe what is here meant can best be driven home by a study of the birth-charts of writers. O. O. McIntyre is said to have been the highest paid journalist in the world. He had the Moon in the house of newspapers (third) and three planets in the house of publishing (ninth).

But there are a wide variety of writers who never were journalists. They write about that of which they have special knowledge. George Bernard Shaw, with Neptune the most elevated planet, in close trine to Mercury, is best known for his plays. Conan Doyle, with most of his planets in the house of secret things (twelfth), is best known for his Sherlock Holmes stories and his writings about spiritualism. Upton Sinclair, with socialistic (Neptune) and universal welfare (Pluto) planets conjunction his M.C., is best known for his socialistic books.

In writing, as in other arts, dramatic expression, in great measure, depends upon the activity of the thought-cells mapped by Neptune. And in addition to its prominence, the writing of fiction is facilitated by the prominence of the Moon, which also gives vividness to the imagination. Jack London had Mercury opposition Moon and square Neptune; while Bulwer-Lytton had Moon conjunction Ascendant and trine Neptune.

Writing is an activity associated with the third house, and only those with active third house thought-cells are apt to be attracted to this association strongly enough to make it as important as it must be in one who does much writing.

But for success as a writer who gets his material published over his own name, there must also be active ninth house thought-cells. A copy-writer in a newspaper office, or a reporter for a newspaper whose name does not appear in association with what he writes, keeps within the province of the third house, and does not need much ninth house activity. Perhaps the so-called ghost writers, who write articles, biographies and other material for prominent people whose names appear as the authors, do not need active ninth house thought-cells. The ninth house thought-cells, however, must be active if the individual is to receive recognition for what he writes. Thus a journalist who aspires to get his material published over his by-line needs active ninth house thought-cells.

The Luck Factor

The luck in getting material published, except newspaper copy for which no credit is given and which is rewritten before publication, primarily is indicated by the aspects of the ninth house. People who have active ninth house thought-cells, even though there is no harmonious aspect to the ruler of the ninth, get material published; but have great obstacles to overcome in so doing. It is much better for a writer to have at least one powerful harmonious aspect to the ruler of the ninth or several weak harmonious aspects. The luck attracted in reference to the public expression of ideas through publications, speech or radio, is chiefly indicated by the harmony or discord of the ninth house thought-cells.

The luck in association with newspapers is indicated by the aspects of the third house. Mercury is the general ruler of writing and printing.

How to Select A Vocation

Its aspects, therefore, have secondary significance in reference to the luck attracted in getting material published and in reference to what is brought into the life through such writings as are published.
